A property transfer instrument is an instrument which provides for property, rights or liabilities of a specified bank to be transferred, and makes other provision for the purposes of, or in connection with, the transfer of property, rights or liabilities of a specified bank: Banking Act 2009 s 33(1). A property transfer instrument may relate to (1) all property, rights and liabilities of the specified bank; (2) all its property, rights and liabilities, subject to specified exceptions; (3) specified property, rights or liabilities; or (4) property, rights or liabilities of a specified description: s 33(2). As to the taking of effect of a property transfer instrument see the Banking Act 2009 s 34, and as to the property that may be transferred see the Banking Act 2009 s 35. A licence in respect of anything transferred by a property transfer instrument continues to have effect despite the transfer: Banking Act 2009 s 37(1). As to provision for the termination of rights see the Banking Act 2009 s 38. Where a property transfer instrument transfers foreign property, the transferor and the transferee must each take any necessary steps to ensure that the transfer is effective as a matter of foreign law: s 39(1), (3). For this purpose, 'foreign property' means property outside the United Kingdom and rights and liabilities under foreign law: Banking Act 2009 s 39(2). Until the transfer is effective as a matter of foreign law, the transferor must hold the property or right for the benefit of the transferee (together with any additional property or right accruing by virtue of the original property or right), or discharge the liability on behalf of the transferee: s 39(4). As to procedural provision relating to the making of property transfer instruments see the Banking Act 2009 ss 40, 41. Where the Bank of England has made a property transfer instrument, it may make one or more supplemental property transfer instruments: Banking Act 2009 s 42(1), (2). A supplemental property transfer instrument is a property transfer instrument which provides for property, rights or liabilities to be transferred from the transferor under the original instrument, and makes other provision of a kind that an original property transfer instrument may make under s 33(1)(b): s 42(3). Where the Bank of England has made a property transfer instrument in respect of a bridge bank in accordance with s 12(2) (see PARA 791A.4), it may make one or more onward property transfer instruments: Banking Act 2009 s 43(1), (2). An onward property transfer instrument is a property transfer instrument which provides for property, rights or liabilities of the bridge bank to be transferred, and makes other provision for the purposes of, or in connection with, the transfer of property, rights or liabilities of the bridge bank: s 43(3).

8. Reverse property transfer instruments and orders

Where the Bank of England has made a property transfer instrument providing for the transfer of property, rights or liabilities to a bridge bank, it may make one or more reverse property transfer instruments in respect of property, rights or liabilities of the bridge bank: Banking Act 2009 s 44(1), (2). If the Bank of England makes an onward property transfer instrument, the Bank may make one or more reverse property transfer instruments in respect of property, rights or liabilities of a transferee of a company wholly owned by the Bank of England, a company wholly owned by the Treasury, or a company wholly owned by a nominee of the Treasury: s 44(3). A reverse property transfer instrument is a property transfer instrument which (1) provides for transfer to the transferor under the original instrument; (2) provides for transfer to the bridge bank; and (3) makes other provision for the purposes of, or in connection with, the transfer of property, rights or liabilities that are, could be or could have been so transferred: s 44(4). Where the Treasury has made a share transfer order in respect of securities issued by a bank, it may make one or more property transfer orders, which are orders which provide for property, rights or liabilities of the bank to be transferred and make other provision for the purposes of, or in connection with, the transfer of property, rights or liabilities of the bank: Banking Act 2009 s 45(1)-(3). Where the Treasury has made a property transfer order providing for the transfer of property, rights or liabilities to a company wholly owned by the Bank of England, the Treasury, or a nominee of the Treasury, it may make one or more reverse property transfer orders in respect of property, rights or liabilities of the transferee under the original order: Banking Act 2009 s 46(1), (2). A reverse property transfer order is a property transfer order which provides for transfer to the transferor under the original order, and makes other provision for the purposes of, or in connection with, the transfer of property, rights or liabilities which are, could be or could have been transferred: s 46(3). The Treasury may by order (a) restrict the making of partial property transfers; (b) impose conditions on the making of partial property transfers; (c) require partial property transfers to include specified provision or provision to a specified effect; and (d) provide for a partial property transfer to be void or voidable, or for other consequences (including automatic transfer of other property, rights or liabilities) to arise, if or in so far as the partial property transfer is made or purported to be made in contravention of a provision of the order (or of another order under s 47): Banking Act 2009 s 47(2). For this purpose, 'partial property transfer' means a property transfer instrument which provides for the transfer of some, but not all, of the property, rights and liabilities of a bank: s 47(1). See further s 47(3), (4); and the Banking Act 2009 (Restriction of Partial Property Transfers) Order 2009, SI 2009/322 (amended by SI 2009/1286). The Treasury may by order (i) restrict the making of partial property transfers in cases that involve, or where they might affect, protected arrangements; (ii) impose conditions on the making of partial property transfers in cases that involve, or where they might affect, protected arrangements; (iii) require partial property transfers to include specified provision, or provision to a specified effect, in respect of or for purposes connected with protected arrangements; and (iv) provide for a partial property transfer to be void or voidable, or for other consequences (including automatic transfer of other property, rights or liabilities) to arise, if or in so far as the partial property transfer is made or purported to be made in contravention of a provision of the order (or of another order under the 2009 Act s 48): Banking Act 2009 s 48(2). In s 48, 'protected arrangements' means security interests, title transfer collateral arrangements, set-off arrangements and netting arrangements; 'security interests' means arrangements under which one person acquires, by way of security, an actual or contingent interest in the property of another; 'title transfer collateral arrangements' are arrangements under which one person transfers assets to another person on terms providing for the latter to transfer assets if specified obligations are discharged; 'set-off arrangements' are arrangements under which two or more debts, claims or obligations can be set off against each other; and 'netting arrangements' are arrangements under which a number of claims or obligations can be converted into a net claim or obligation and include, in particular, 'close-out' netting arrangements, under which actual or theoretical debts are calculated during the course of a contract for the purpose of enabling them to be set off against each other or to be converted into a net debt: s 48(1). For this purpose, 'arrangements' includes arrangements which are formed wholly or partly by one or more contracts or trusts, arise under or are wholly or partly governed by the law of a country or territory outside the United Kingdom, wholly or partly arise automatically as a matter of law, involve any number of parties, or operate partly by reference to other arrangements between other parties: s 48(5). See further s 48(3), (4); and the Banking Act 2009 (Restriction of Partial Property Transfers) Order 2009, SI 2009/322.

9. Compensation

Where the Bank of England makes a share transfer instrument or a property transfer instrument in accordance with s 11(2) (see PARA 791A.4), the Treasury must make a compensation scheme order: Banking Act 2009 s 50(1), (2). A 'compensation scheme order' is an order establishing a scheme for determining whether transferors should be paid compensation, or providing for transferors to be paid compensation, and establishing a scheme for paying any compensation: Banking Act 2009 s 49(2). An order made by virtue of s 50(2) may include a third party compensation order: Banking Act 2009 s 50(3). A 'third party compensation order' is provision made in accordance with s 59 for compensation to be paid to persons other than transferors: Banking Act 2009 s 49(3). See further the Banking Act 2009 ss 59, 60; and the Banking Act 2009 (Third Party Compensation Arrangements for Partial Property Transfers) Regulations 2009, SI 2009/319. In the case of a partial property transfer, an order made by virtue of s 50(2) must include a third party compensation order: Banking Act 2009 s 50(4). Where the Treasury makes a share transfer order in accordance with s 13(2), it must make either a compensation scheme order or a resolution fund order: Banking Act 2009 s 51(1), (2). A 'resolution fund order' is an order establishing a scheme under which transferors become entitled to the proceeds of the disposal of things transferred in specified circumstances and to a specified extent: Banking Act 2009 s 49(3). A resolution fund order made by virtue of s 51(2)(b) may include a compensation scheme order and a third party compensation order: s 51(3). A compensation scheme order made by virtue of s 51(2) may include a third party compensation order: s 51(4). Where the Bank of England makes a property transfer instrument in accordance with s 12(2), the Treasury must make a resolution fund order: Banking Act 2009 s 52(1), (2). An order made by virtue of s 52(2) may include a compensation scheme order and a third party compensation order: s 52(3). In the case of a partial property transfer, the resolution fund order must include a third party compensation order: s 52(4). Where the Treasury makes an onward share transfer order under s 28, a reverse share transfer order under s 29, a property transfer order under s 45, or a reverse property transfer order under s 46, or the Bank of England makes a bridge bank share transfer instrument under s 30, a bridge bank reverse share transfer instrument under s 31, an onward property transfer instrument under s 43, or a reverse property transfer instrument under s 44, the Treasury may make a compensation scheme order and a third party compensation order: Banking Act 2009 s 53. As to provision for the independent valuation of the compensation payable under a compensation scheme order see the Banking Act 2009 ss 54-57. A resolution fund order must include provision for determining (1) who will be entitled to a share of the proceeds on disposal of things transferred; (2) the way in which the proceeds will be calculated; and (3) the way in which shares will be calculated: Banking Act 2009 s 58(1). See further s 58(2)-(8). As to the making of orders see the Banking Act 2009 ss 61, 62. In exercise of these powers the Treasury has made the Dunfermline Building Society Compensation Scheme, Resolution Fund and Third Party Compensation Order 2009, SI 2009/1800; and the Dunfermline Building Society Independent Valuer Order 2009, SI 2009/1810.

10. Incidental functions

The residual bank and each group company must provide such services and facilities as are required to enable a transferee to operate the transferred business, or part of it, effectively: Banking Act 2009 s 63(2). For this purpose, 'residual bank' means a bank all or part of whose business has been transferred in accordance with s 11(2)(b) or 12(2) (see PARA 791A.4); 'group company' means anything which is, or was immediately before the transfer, a group undertaking in relation to a residual bank; 'transferee' means a commercial purchaser or bridge bank to whom all or part of the transferred business has been transferred; and 'the transferred business' means the part of the bank's business that has been transferred: s 63(1). See further s 63(3)-(7). The Bank of England may (1) cancel a contract or other arrangement between the residual bank and a group company; (2) modify the terms of a contract or other arrangement between the residual bank and a group company; (3) add or substitute a transferee as a party to a contract or other arrangement between the residual bank and a group company; (4) confer and impose rights and obligations on a group company and a transferee, which have effect as if created by contract between them; and (5) confer and impose rights and obligations on the residual bank and a transferee which have effect as if created by contract between them: Banking Act 2009 s 64(2). See further the s 64(3), (4). The continuity authority may provide for an obligation under s 63 to apply in respect of an onward transferee, and extend s 64 so as to permit action to be taken under s 64(2) for the purpose of enabling an onward transferee to operate transferred business, or part of it, effectively: Banking Act 2009 s 65(2). 'Onward transfer' means a transfer of property, rights or liabilities from a person who is a transferee under a property transfer instrument under s 12(2) or a bank, securities issued by which were earlier transferred by a share transfer order under s 13(2): s 65(1). See further s 65(4)-(8). Each former group company must provide such services and facilities as are required to enable the transferred bank to operate effectively: Banking Act 2009 s 66(2). For this purpose, 'former group company' means anything which was a group undertaking in relation to the transferred bank immediately before the transfer; and 'transferred bank' means a bank all or part of the ownership of which has been transferred in accordance with s 11(2)(a) or 13(2): s 66(1). See further s 66(3)-(8). The continuity authority may (a) cancel a contract or other arrangement between the transferred bank and a former group company; (b) modify the terms of a contract or other arrangement between the transferred bank and a former group company; and (c) confer and impose rights and obligations on a former group company and the transferred bank, which has effect as if created by contract between them: Banking Act 2009 s 67(2). For this purpose, 'the continuity authority' means the Bank of England, where ownership was transferred in accordance with s 11(2)(a), and the Treasury, where ownership was transferred in accordance with s 13(2): Banking Act 2009 s 66(1). See further the Banking Act 2009 s 67(3), (4). The continuity authority may provide for an obligation under s 66 to apply in respect of the bank after the onward transfer, and extend s 67 so as to permit action to be taken under s 67(2) to enable the bank to operate effectively after the onward transfer: Banking Act 2009 s 68(2). For this purpose, 'onward transfer' means a transfer of securities issued by a bank where securities issued by the bank were earlier transferred by share transfer order under s 13(2), or the bank was the transferee under a property transfer instrument under s 12(2): s 68(1). As to supplementary provision in relation to continuity obligations see the Banking Act 2009 ss 69, 70. A share transfer order, share transfer instrument or property transfer instruments may make provision about the consequences of a transfer for a pension scheme, and about property, rights and liabilities of any pension scheme of the bank: Banking Act 2009 s 71(1), (2). See further the s 71(3)-(7). Provision is also made concerning enforcement (see Banking Act 2009 s 72), disputes (see Banking Act 2009 s 73), tax (see Banking Act 2009 s 74) and the power of the Treasury to change the law to enable the powers to be used effectively having regard to the special resolution objectives (see Banking Act 2009 s 75). In exercise of the power under s 75, the Treasury has made the Amendments to Law (Resolution of Dunfermline Building Society) Order 2009, SI 2009/814; and the Amendments to Law (Resolution of Dunfermline Building Society) (No 2) Order 2009, SI 2009/1805.

11. Treasury and holding companies

The Bank of England may not exercise a stabilisation power (see PARA 791A.1) in respect of a bank if the Treasury notifies the Bank that the exercise would be likely to contravene an international obligation of the United Kingdom: Banking Act 2009 s 76(1). Where the Bank of England has transferred all or part of a bank's business to a bridge bank, it must comply with any notice of the Treasury requiring the Bank, for the purpose of ensuring compliance by the United Kingdom with its international obligations, to take specified action under Pt 1 (ss 1-89) in respect of the bridge bank, or not to take such action: Banking Act 2009 s 77(1), (2). The Bank of England is prohibited from taking certain action under Pt 1 without the Treasury's consent where it would have implications for public funds: see the Banking Act 2009 ss 78, 79. Where the Bank of England transfers all or part of a bank's business to a bridge bank, the Bank must report to the Chancellor of the Exchequer about the activities of the bridge bank: Banking Act 2009 s 80(1). See further 80(2)-(6). Where the Treasury makes one or more share transfer orders under s 13(2) in respect of a bank, the Treasury must lay before Parliament a report about the activities of the bank: Banking Act 2009 s 81(1). See further s 81(2)-(4). The Treasury may take a parent undertaking of a bank into temporary public ownership in accordance with s 13(2) where (1) the Financial Services Authority is satisfied that the general conditions for the exercise of a stabilisation power set out in s 7 are met in respect of the bank; (2) the Treasury is satisfied that it is necessary to take action in respect of the holding company for the purpose specified in s 9(2) or (3); and (3) the holding company is an undertaking incorporated in, or formed under the law of any part of, the United Kingdom: Banking Act 2009 s 82. See further the Banking Act 2009 s 83.

791B. Bank insolvency.

1. Features of bank insolvency

The Banking Act 2009 Pt 2 (ss 90-135) provides for a procedure to be known as bank insolvency: Banking Act 2009 s 90(1). In Pt 2, 'bank' means a United Kingdom institution which has permission under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 Pt 4 (ss 40-55) (see PARAS 348-361) to carry on the regulated activity of accepting deposits, but does not mean (1) a building society within the meaning of the Building Societies Act 1986 s 119 (see PARA 1906); (2) a credit union within the meaning of the Credit Unions Act 1979 s 31; (3) any other class of institution excluded by an order made by the Treasury (Banking Act 2009 s 91(1), (2)); or (4) any institution with permission under the Financial Services and Markets Act Pt IV (ss 40-55) to effect or carry out contracts of insurance as principal (Banking Act 2009 (Exclusion of Insurers) Order 2010, SI 2010/35). The Treasury may by order provide for the Banking Act 2009 Pt 2 to apply, subject to modifications, to building societies and credit unions as it applies to banks: Banking Act 2009 ss 130, 131. See the Building Societies (Insolvency and Special Administration) Order 2009, SI 2009/805. The Lord Chancellor may modify the provisions of the Banking Act 2009 Pt 2 in their application to partnerships: Banking Act 2009 s 132(1). The main features of bank insolvency are that (a) a bank enters the process by court order; (b) the order appoints a bank liquidator; (c) the bank liquidator aims to arrange for the bank's eligible depositors to have their accounts transferred or to receive their compensation from the Financial Services Compensation Scheme; (d) the bank liquidator then winds up the bank; and (e) for those purposes, the bank liquidator has powers and duties of liquidators, as applied and modified by the provisions of Pt 2: Banking Act 2009 s 90(2). In Pt 2 'eligible depositors' means depositors who are eligible for compensation under the Financial Services Compensation Scheme: Banking Act 2009 s 93(3). Detailed provision for the process of bank insolvency is made by the Bank Insolvency (England and Wales) Rules 2009, SI 2009/356, which also apply, with specified modifications, various provisions of the Insolvency Rules 1986, SI 1986/1925.

2. Bank insolvency orders

A bank insolvency order is an order appointing a person as the bank liquidator of a bank: Banking Act 2009 s 94(1). A person is eligible for appointment as a bank liquidator if he is qualified to act as an insolvency practitioner and he has consented to act: s 94(2), (3). An application for a bank insolvency order may be made to the court by the Bank of England, the Financial Services Authority or the Secretary of State: Banking Act 2009 s 95(1). An application must nominate a person to be appointed as the bank liquidator: s 95(2). The Bank of England may apply for a bank insolvency order only if (1) the Authority has informed the Bank that it is satisfied that conditions 1 and 2 in s 7 (see PARA 791A.3) are met; and (2) the Bank is satisfied that the bank has eligible depositors and that Ground A or C applies: Banking Act 2009 s 96(1). 'Ground A' is that that a bank is unable, or likely to become unable, to pay its debts; and 'Ground C' is that the winding up of a bank would be fair: s 96(1)(a), (c). The Authority may apply for a bank insolvency order only if (a) the Bank of England consents; and (b) the Authority is satisfied that conditions 1 and 2 in s 7 are met, that the bank has eligible depositors and that Ground A or C applies: s 96(3). The Secretary of State may apply for a bank insolvency order only if satisfied that the bank has eligible depositors and that Ground B applies: s 96(4). 'Ground B' is that the winding up of a bank would be in the public interest: s 96(1)(b). The court may make a bank insolvency order on the application of the Bank of England or the Authority if satisfied that the bank has eligible depositors and that Ground A or C applies: Banking Act 2009 s 97(1). The court may make a bank insolvency order on the application of the Secretary of State if satisfied that the bank has eligible depositors and that Grounds B and C apply: s 97(2). On an application for a bank insolvency order the court may grant the application, adjourn the application (generally or to a specified date), or dismiss the application: s 97(3). As to the commencement of bank insolvency orders see the Banking Act 2009 s 98.

3. Bank liquidation

A bank liquidator has the objectives of (1) working with the Financial Services Compensation Scheme so as to ensure that, as soon as is reasonably practicable, each eligible depositor has the relevant account transferred to another financial institution or receives payment from or on behalf of the Scheme; and (2) winding up the affairs of the bank so as to achieve the best result for the bank's creditors as a whole: Banking Act 2009 s 99(1)-(3). For the purpose of co-operating in the pursuit of the objective in head (1), the Financial Services Compensation Scheme may make or arrange for payments to or in respect of eligible depositors of the bank, and may make money available to facilitate the transfer of accounts of eligible depositors of the bank: Banking Act 2009 s 123(1). For supplementary provision relating to the transfer of eligible depositors' accounts from the bank to another financial institution see the Banking Act 2009 s 124. Following a bank insolvency order a liquidation committee must be established for the purpose of ensuring that the bank liquidator properly exercises the functions under Pt 2: Banking Act 2009 s 100(1). As to the membership and procedure of a liquidation committee see ss 100(2)-(7), 101, 102. A bank liquidator may do anything necessary or expedient for the pursuit of its objectives: Banking Act 2009 s 103(1). Various statutory provisions relating to winding up apply with modifications to bank insolvencies: see s 103. Provision is also made with regard to (a) the additional general powers of a bank liquidator (Banking Act 2009 s 104); (b) the status of a bank liquidator as an officer of the court (Banking Act 2009 s 105); (c) the term of appointment of a bank liquidator (Banking Act 2009 s 106); (d) the resignation of a bank liquidator (Banking Act 2009 s 107); (e) the removal of a bank liquidator by order of the court (Banking Act 2009 s 108); the removal of a bank liquidator following a meeting of creditors (Banking Act 2009 s 109); (f) the disqualification of a bank liquidator (Banking Act 2009 s 110); (g) the release of a bank liquidator (Banking Act 2009 s 111); and (h) the replacement of a bank liquidator (Banking Act 2009 s 112). A bank liquidator who obtains money by realising assets in the course of the bank insolvency must pay it into the Insolvency Services Account: Banking Act 2009 s 127.

4. Termination of process

After the bank liquidator has presented a final report on the bank liquidation to the liquidation committee, the bank liquidator may, with the consent of the liquidation committee, make a proposal in accordance with the Insolvency Act 1986 s 1: Banking Act 2009 s 113(1)-(3). See further s 113(4)-(9). A bank liquidator who thinks that administration would achieve a better result for the bank's creditors as a whole than bank insolvency may apply to the court for an administration order under the 1986 Act Sch B1 para 38: Banking Act 2009 s 114(1). An application may be made only if (1) the liquidation committee has passed a full payment resolution; (2) the liquidation committee has resolved that moving to administration might enable the rescue of the bank as a going concern; and (3) the bank liquidator is satisfied, as a result of arrangements made with the Financial Services Compensation Scheme, that any depositors still eligible for compensation under the scheme will receive their payments or have their accounts transferred during administration: Banking Act 2009 s 114(2)-(5). A bank liquidator who thinks that the winding up of the bank is for practical purposes complete must summon a final meeting of the liquidation committee: Banking Act 2009 s 115(1). At the meeting the liquidation committee must consider the report and decide whether to release the bank liquidator: s 115(3). If the liquidation committee decides to release the bank liquidator, the bank liquidator must notify the court and the registrar of companies, and he vacates office, and has release, when the court is notified: s 115(4). At the end of the period of three months beginning with the day of the registration of such notice, the bank is dissolved: s 115(8). For supplementary provision relating to dissolution see the Banking Act 2009 s 116.

5. Other processes

On a petition for a winding-up order or an application for an administration order in respect of a bank the court may, instead, make a bank insolvency order: Banking Act 2009 s 117(1). Such an order may be made only on the application of the Financial Services Authority with the consent of the Bank of England, or on the application of the Bank of England: s 117(2). A resolution for voluntary winding up of a bank under the Insolvency Act 1986 s 84 has no effect without the prior approval of the court: Banking Act 2009 s 118(1). An application for an administration order in respect of a bank may not be determined unless specified conditions are satisfied: Banking Act 2009 s 120. As to the application of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 to bank insolvencies see the Banking Act 2009 s 121.

791C. Bank administration.

1. Features of bank administration

The Banking Act 2009 Pt 3 (ss 136-168) provides for a procedure to be known as bank administration: Banking Act 2009 s 136(1). The Treasury may by order provide for Pt 3 to apply, subject to modifications, to building societies and credit unions as it applies to banks: Banking Act 2009 ss 158, 159. See the Building Societies (Insolvency and Special Administration) Order 2009, SI 2009/805. The Lord Chancellor may modify the provisions of Pt 2 in their application to partnerships: Banking Act 2009 s 163(1). The main features of bank administration are that (1) it is used where part of the business of a bank is sold to a commercial purchaser in accordance with s 11 (see PARA 791A.4) or transferred to a bridge bank in accordance with s 12 (see PARA 791A.4); (2) the court appoints a bank administrator on the application of the Bank of England; (3) the bank administrator is able and required to ensure that the non-sold or non-transferred part of the bank ('the residual bank') provides services or facilities required to enable the commercial purchaser ('the private sector purchaser') or the transferee ('the bridge bank') to operate effectively; and (4) in other respects the process is the same as for normal administration under the Insolvency Act 1986, subject to specified modifications: Banking Act 2009 s 136(2). A bank administrator has the objectives of (a) ensuring the supply to the private sector purchaser or bridge bank of such services and facilities as are required to enable it, in the opinion of the Bank of England, to operate effectively ('Objective 1') (Banking Act 2009 s 138(1)); and (b) rescuing the residual bank as a going concern ('Objective 2(a)'), or achieving a better result for the residual bank's creditors as a whole than would be likely if the residual bank were wound up without first being in bank administration ('Objective 2(b)') (Banking Act 2009 s 140(1)). See further the Banking Act 2009 s 138(2)-(5). Objective 1 takes priority over Objective 2, but a bank administrator is obliged to begin working towards both objectives immediately on appointment: Banking Act 2009 s 137(2). Objective 1 ceases if the Bank of England notifies the bank administrator that the residual bank is no longer required in connection with the private sector purchaser or bridge bank: Banking Act 2009 s 139(1). Such a notice is to be known as an 'Objective 1 Achievement Notice': s 139(4). In pursuing Objective 2, a bank administrator must aim to achieve Objective 2(a) unless of the opinion either that it is not reasonably practicable to achieve it or that Objective 2(b) would achieve a better result for the residual bank's creditors as a whole: Banking Act 2009 s 140(2). In pursuing Objective 2(b) in bank administration following transfer to a bridge bank, the bank administrator may not realise any asset unless the asset is on a list of realisable assets agreed between the bank administrator and the Bank of England or the Bank has given an Objective 1 Achievement Notice: Banking Act 2009 s 140(3). Detailed provision for the process of bank administration is made by the Bank Administration (England and Wales) Rules 2009, SI 2009/357, which also apply, with specified modifications, various provisions of the Insolvency Rules 1986, SI 1986/1925. For provision relating to the sharing of information following transfer to a bridge bank see the Banking Act 2009 s 148; and the Bank Administration (Sharing Information) Regulations 2009, SI 2009/314 (which also apply to building societies, subject to modifications: see the Building Societies (Insolvency and Special Administration) Order 2009, SI 2009/805, Sch 2). For provision for multiple transfers see the Banking Act 2009 ss 149-152; the Banking Act 2009 (Bank Administration) (Modification for Application to Banks in Temporary Public Ownership) Regulations 2009, SI 2009/312 (which also apply to building societies, subject to modifications: see the Building Societies (Insolvency and Special Administration) Order 2009, SI 2009/805, Sch 2); and the Banking Act 2009 (Bank Administration) (Modification for Application to Multiple Transfers) Regulations 2009, SI 2009/313 (which also apply to building societies, subject to modifications: see the Building Societies (Insolvency and Special Administration) Order 2009, SI 2009/805, Sch 2).

2. Bank administration orders

A bank administration order is an order appointing a person as the bank administrator of a bank: Banking Act 2009 s 141(1). A person is eligible for appointment as a bank administrator if he is qualified to act as an insolvency practitioner and he has consented to act: Banking Act 2009 s 141(2), (3). A bank administrator is an officer of the court: Banking Act 2009 s 146. An application for a bank administration order may be made to the court by the Bank of England: Banking Act 2009 s 142(1). An application must nominate a person to be appointed as the bank administrator (s 142(2)), and the bank must be given notice of an application (s 142(3)). The Bank of England may apply for a bank administration order in respect of a bank if (1) the Bank has made or intends to make a property transfer instrument in respect of the bank in accordance with s 11(2) or 12(2) (see PARA 179A.4); and (2) the Bank is satisfied that the residual bank is unable to pay its debts or is likely to become unable to pay its debts as a result of the property transfer instrument which the Bank intends to make: Banking Act 2009 s 143. The court may make a bank administration order if satisfied that the conditions in s 143 were met: Banking Act 2009 s 144(1). On an application for a bank administration order the court may grant the application, adjourn the application (generally or to a specified date), or dismiss the application: s 144(2). Various provisions of the Insolvency Act 1986 apply with specified modifications to bank administrations as they apply to other administrations: see the Banking Act 2009 s 145. The bank administrator must as soon as is reasonably practicable, and before an Objective 1 Achievement Notice (see PARA 791C.1) has been given, make a statement that has been agreed with the Bank of England setting out proposals for achieving the objectives in s 137 and stating whether the bank administrator proposes to pursue Objective 2(a) or Objective 2(b) in s 140: Banking Act 2009 s 147(1)-(4). See further s 147(5)-(8).

3. Termination

If the Bank of England has given an Objective 1 Achievement Notice (see PARA 791C.1) and the bank administrator has pursued Objective 2(a) in s 140 and believes that it has been achieved, the bank administrator may give a notice under the Insolvency Act 1986 Sch B1 para 80 (notice bringing administrator's appointment to an end on achievement of objectives (see COMPANY AND PARTNERSHIP INSOLVENCY vol 7(3) (2004 Reissue) PARA 367)): Banking Act 2009 s 153(1), (2). If the Bank of England has given an Objective 1 Achievement Notice and the bank administrator pursues Objective 2(b) in s 140, the bank administrator may give a notice under the 1986 Act Sch B1 para 84 (no more assets for distribution (see COMPANY AND PARTNERSHIP INSOLVENCY vol 7(3) (2004 Reissue) PARA 367)) or make a proposal in accordance with s 1 (company voluntary arrangement (see COMPANY AND PARTNERSHIP INSOLVENCY vol 7(3) (2004 Reissue) PARA 367)): Banking Act 2009 s 154(1), (2). See further s 154(3)-(7). As to the application of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 to bank administrations see the Banking Act 2009 s 155.

791D. Inter-bank payment systems.

1. Recognised systems

The Banking Act 2009 Pt 5 (ss 181-206) enables the Bank of England to oversee certain systems for payments between financial institutions: Banking Act 2009 s 181. The Treasury may by order ('recognition order') specify an inter-bank payment system as a recognised system for the purposes of Pt 5: Banking Act 2009 s 184(1). In Pt 5, 'inter-bank payment system' means arrangements designed to facilitate or control the transfer of money between financial institutions who participate in the arrangements: Banking Act 2009 s 182(1). For this purpose, 'financial institutions' means banks and building societies (s 182(3)); and 'money' includes credit (s 182(4)). A recognition order must specify in as much detail as is reasonably practicable the arrangements which constitute the inter-bank payment system: Banking Act 2009 s 184(2). The Treasury may not specify an inter-bank system operated solely by the Bank of England: s 184(3). The Treasury may make a recognition order in respect of an inter-bank payment system only if satisfied that any deficiencies in the design of the system, or any disruption of its operation, would be likely to threaten the stability of, or confidence in, the United Kingdom financial system, or have serious consequences for business or other interests throughout the United Kingdom: Banking Act 2009 s 185(1). In considering whether to specify a system the Treasury must have regard to (1) the number and value of the transactions that the system presently processes or is likely to process in the future; (2) the nature of the transactions that the system processes; (3) whether those transactions or their equivalent could be handled by other systems; (4) the relationship between the system and other systems; and (5) whether the system is used by the Bank of England in the course of its role as a monetary authority: s 185(2). As to the duty of the Treasury to consult before making a recognition order see the Banking Act 2009 s 186. The Treasury may revoke a recognition order (Banking Act 2009 s 187(1)), and must revoke a recognition order if not satisfied that the criteria in s 185 are met in respect of the recognised inter-bank payment system (s 187(2)). As to the duty of the Treasury to consult before revoking a recognition order see s 187(3)-(5). The Bank of England may by notice in writing require a person to provide information which the Bank thinks will help the Treasury in determining whether to make a recognition order, or which the Bank otherwise requires in connection with its functions under Pt 5: Banking Act 2009 s 204(1). See further s 204(2)-(11).

2. Regulation

The Bank of England may publish principles to which operators of recognised inter-bank payment systems are to have regard in operating the systems (Banking Act 2009 s 188), and publish codes of practice about the operation of recognised inter-bank payment systems (Banking Act 2009 s 189). In Pt 5 (ss 181-206) a reference to the 'operator' of an inter-bank payment system is a reference to any person with responsibility under the system for managing or operating it (Banking Act 2009 s 183(a)); and a reference to the operation of a system includes a reference to its management (s 183(b)). The Bank may also require the operator of a recognised inter-bank payment system (1) to establish rules for the operation of the system; (2) to change the rules in a specified way or so as to achieve a specified purpose; (3) to notify the Bank of any proposed change to the rules; and (4) not to change the rules without the approval of the Bank: Banking Act 2009 s 190(1). A requirement under head (3) or (4) above may be general or specific: s 190(2). The Bank of England may give directions to the operator of a recognised inter-bank payment system requiring or prohibiting the taking of specified action in the operation of the system, or setting standards to be met in the operation of the system: Banking Act 2009 s 191(1), (2). See further s 191(3)-(6). For further procedural provision see the Banking Act 2009 s 192, and as to the payment of fees by operators of recognised inter-bank payment systems see the Banking Act 2009 s 203. It is an offence for the operator of a non-recognised inter-bank payment system to assert that the system is recognised or to do anything which suggests that the system is recognised: Banking Act 2009 s 205.

3. Inspections

The Bank of England may appoint one or more persons to inspect the operation of a recognised inter-bank payment system: Banking Act 2009 s 193(1). The operator of a recognised inter-bank payment system must grant an inspector access, on request and at any reasonable time, to premises on or from which any part of the system is operated, and otherwise co-operate with an inspector: s 193(2). A justice of the peace may on the application of an inspector issue a warrant entitling an inspector or a constable to enter premises if any part of the management or operation of a recognised inter-bank payment system is conducted on the premises (whether by an operator of the system or by someone providing services used by an operator), and any of certain specified conditions is satisfied: Banking Act 2009 s 194(1). The conditions are that (1) a requirement under s 204 (see PARA 791D.1) in connection with the payment system has not been complied with, and there is reason to believe that information relevant to the requirement is on the premises; (2) there is reason to suspect that, if a requirement under s 204 were imposed in connection with the payment system in respect of information on the premises, the requirement would not be complied with and the information would be destroyed or otherwise tampered with; (3) an inspector gave reasonable notice of a wish to enter the premises and was refused entry; and (4) a person occupying or managing the premises has failed to co-operate with an inspector: s 194(2)-(5). A warrant (a) permits an inspector or a constable to enter the premises; (b) permits an inspector or a constable to search the premises and copy or take possession of information or documents; and (c) permits a constable to use reasonable force: s 194(6).

4. Other means of enforcement

Where (1) the operator of a recognised inter-bank payment system is not taking sufficient account of principles published by the Bank of England under the Banking Act 2009 s 188 (see PARA 791D.2); (2) the operator is failing to comply with a code of practice under s 189 (see PARA 791D.2); or (3) the report is likely for any other reason to assist the Bank in the performance of its functions under Pt 5 (ss 181-206), the Bank may require the operator to appoint an expert to report on the operation of the system: Banking Act 2009 s 195(1), (2). The Bank may impose requirements about (a) the nature of the expert to be appointed; (b) the content of the report; (c) treatment of the report (including disclosure and publication); and (d) timing: s 195(3). The Bank of England may publish details of a compliance failure by the operator of a recognised inter-bank payment system: Banking Act 2009 s 197(1). In Pt 5, 'compliance failure' means a failure by the operator of a recognised inter-bank payment system to (i) comply with a code of practice under s 189; (ii) comply with a requirement under s 190 (see PARA 791D.2); (iii) comply with a direction under s 191 (see PARA 791D.2); or (iv) ensure compliance with a requirement under s 195: Banking Act 2009 s 196. The Bank may also publish details of a sanction imposed under ss 198-200: Banking Act 2009 s 197(2). The Bank of England may require the operator of a recognised inter-bank payment system to pay a penalty in respect of a compliance failure: Banking Act 2009 s 198(1). See further s 198(2)-(4). Where the Bank of England thinks that a compliance failure threatens the stability of, or confidence in, the United Kingdom financial system, or has serious consequences for business or other interests throughout the United Kingdom, it may give the operator of the inter-bank payment system concerned an order to stop operating the system (a 'closure order') either for a specified period, until further notice, or permanently: Banking Act 2009 s 199(1), (2). See further s 199(3)-(5). The Bank of England may by order prohibit a specified person from being an operator of a recognised inter-bank payment system or holding an office or position involving responsibility for taking decisions about the management of a recognised inter-bank payment system, either for a specified period, until further notice or permanently: Banking Act 2009 s 200. Before imposing a sanction on the operator of an inter-bank payment system or on another person the Bank of England must (A) give the operator or other person a notice (a 'warning notice'); (B) give the operator or other person at least 21 days to make representations; (C) consider any representations made; and (D) as soon as is reasonably practicable, give the operator or other person a notice stating whether the Bank intends to impose the sanction: Banking Act 2009 s 201(1). As to provision for appeals see the Banking Act 2009 s 202.

791E. Investment bank insolvency.

1. Investment bank insolvency regulations

The Treasury may by regulations ('investment bank insolvency regulations') (1) modify the law of insolvency in its application to investment banks; and (2) establish a new procedure for investment banks where they are unable, or are likely to become unable, to pay their debts (within the meaning of the Banking Act 2009 s 93(4) (see PARA 791B.1)) or their winding up would be fair (within the meaning of s 93(8) (see PARA 791B.1)): Banking Act 2009 s 233(1). For this purpose, 'investment bank' means an institution which (a) has permission under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 Pt 4 (ss 40-55) to carry on the regulated activity of (i) safeguarding and administering investments; (ii) dealing in investments as principal; or (iii) dealing in investments as agent; (b) holds client assets, meaning assets which an institution has undertaken to hold for a client; and (c) is incorporated in, or formed under the law of any part of, the United Kingdom: Banking Act 2009 s 232(1)-(5). Investment bank insolvency regulations may, in particular, (A) apply or replicate (with or without modifications) or make provision similar to provision made by or under the Insolvency Act 1986 or the Banking Act 2009 Pt 2 or 3; and (B) establish a new procedure either to operate for investment banks in place of liquidation or administration (under the 1986 Act) or to operate alongside liquidation or administration in respect of a particular part of the business or affairs of investment banks: Banking Act 2009 s 233(2). In making investment bank insolvency regulations the Treasury must have regard to the desirability of identifying, protecting, and facilitating the return of, client assets, protecting creditors' rights, ensuring certainty for investment banks, creditors, clients, liquidators and administrators, minimising the disruption of business and markets, and maximising the efficiency and effectiveness of the financial services industry in the United Kingdom: s 233(3).

2. Contents of regulations

Investment bank insolvency regulations (see PARA 791E.1) may (1) provide for a procedure to be instituted by a court or by the action of one or more specified classes of person; (2) (a) confer functions on persons appointed in accordance with the regulations, which may, in particular, (i) be similar to the functions of a liquidator or administrator under the Insolvency Act 1986; or (ii) involve acting as a trustee of client assets; and (b) specify objectives to be pursued by a person appointed in accordance with the regulations; (3) make the application of a provision depend (a) on whether an investment bank is, or is likely to become, unable to pay its debts; (b) on whether the winding up of an investment bank would be fair; or (c) partly on those and partly on other considerations; (4) make provision about the relationship between a procedure established by the regulations and (a) liquidation or administration under the 1986 Act; (b) bank insolvency or bank administration under the 2009 Act Pt 2 or 3; and (c) provision made by or under any other enactment in connection with insolvency; (5) include provision (a) establishing a mechanism for determining which assets are client assets, subject to 232; (b) establishing a mechanism for determining that assets are to be, or not to be, treated as client assets, subject to s 232; (c) about the treatment of client assets; (d) about the treatment of unsettled transactions (and related collateral); (e) for the transfer to another financial institution of assets or transactions; (f) for the creation or enforcement of rights (including rights that take preference over creditors' rights) in respect of client assets or other assets; (g) indemnifying a person who is exercising or purporting to exercise functions under or by virtue of the regulations; (h) for recovery of assets transferred in error; (6) confer functions on (a) a court or tribunal; (b) the Financial Services Authority; (c) the Financial Services Compensation Scheme; (d) the scheme manager of the Financial Services Compensation Scheme; and (e) any other specified person; (7) include provision about institutions that are or were group undertakings (within the meaning of the Companies Act 2006 s 1161(5)) of an investment bank; (8) replicate or apply, with or without modifications, a power to make procedural rules; and (9) include provision for assigning or apportioning responsibility for the cost of the application of a procedure established or modified by the regulations: Banking Act 2009 s 234. Provision is also made for the making of investment bank insolvency regulations (see the Banking Act 2009 s 235) and for reviews of investment bank insolvency regulations (see the Banking Act 2009 s 236).

(ii) The Financial Services and Markets Act 2000

792. The statutory regulation of financial services and markets.

The Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 provides for the Financial Services Authority<sup>1</sup> to be the sole regulatory authority for the financial services industry, with powers of authorisation, supervision and enforcement<sup>2</sup>. It also creates a tribunal, known as the Financial Services and Markets Tribunal, to hear references from certain decisions of the Financial Services Authority<sup>3</sup>.

The Act contains a general prohibition, which prohibits a person from carrying on a regulated activity which relates to investment or property<sup>4</sup> unless he is either an authorised person or an exempt person<sup>5</sup>. The former prohibitions on investment advertisement and unsolicited calls are replaced with a new scheme to control financial promotion<sup>6</sup>. In addition to powers of investigation and enforcement<sup>7</sup>, there are powers to impose penalties for market abuse<sup>8</sup> which supplement the provisions relating to insider dealing<sup>9</sup>. The Act also makes provision for consumer protection<sup>10</sup>, and provides for there to be a single compensation scheme<sup>11</sup> and a single ombudsman<sup>12</sup>.

See also the Financial Services Authority's Handbook of Rules and Guidance, Prudential Standards, General Prudential Sourcebook (GENPRU), Prudential Sourcebook for Banks, Building Societies and Investment Firms (BIPRU). As to the Handbook generally see PARA 22.

2 See PARA 314 et seq. The Bank of England previously had the duty to supervise banking institutions under the Banking Act 1987 s 1 (repealed) but this duty was removed and transferred to the Financial Services Authority: see the Bank of England Act 1998 Pt III (ss 21-30), Sch 4 (ss 21, 23 amended, and ss 25-29 repealed, by SI 2001/3649). The Bank did not owe individual commercial banks a duty of care in carrying out its supervisory functions: Minorities Finance Ltd v Arthur Young [1989] 2 All ER 105. But it could be liable for misfeasance in public office: Three Rivers District Council v Bank of England (No 3) [2003] 2 AC 1, [2000] 3 All ER 1, HL.

In 1694, by Act of Parliament<sup>1</sup> and by a charter granted under letters patent authorised by the Act<sup>2</sup>, the subscribers and contributors to a government loan of £1,200,000, their successors and assigns, were constituted a body corporate and politic by the name of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, with perpetual succession and a common seal<sup>3</sup>. A supplemental charter was granted in 1896<sup>4</sup>.

On 1 March 1946<sup>5</sup>, the capital, amounting to £14,553,000<sup>6</sup>, was brought into public ownership by transfer to the Treasury Solicitor<sup>7</sup> to be held on behalf of the Treasury<sup>8</sup>. The existing charters were with some exceptions<sup>9</sup> revoked, and a new Bank of England charter was granted, as from the same date<sup>10</sup>.

The Treasury may from time to time give such directions to the Bank of England as, after consultation with the Governor of the Bank, it thinks necessary in the public interest, except in relation to monetary policy<sup>1</sup>. Subject to any such directions, the affairs of the Bank are managed by the court of directors<sup>2</sup>.

If it thinks it necessary in the public interest, the Bank may request information from and make recommendations to bankers and may, if so authorised by the Treasury, issue directions to any banker<sup>3</sup> for the purpose of securing that effect is given to any such request or recommendation<sup>4</sup>. Before authorising the issue of any such directions, the Treasury must give the banker concerned or such person as appears to the Treasury to represent him, an opportunity of making representations with respect to the proposed direction<sup>5</sup>. No request or recommendations may be made by the Bank with respect to the affairs of any particular customer of a banker<sup>6</sup>.

TEXT AND NOTES--Nothing in the Banking Act 2009 affects the generality of the Bank of England Act 1946 s 4: Banking Act 2009 s 247.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(2) CONSTITUTION OF BANKS/(i) Bank of England/795. The court of directors.

795. The court of directors.

The court of directors consists of a Governor, two Deputy Governors and 16 directors of the Bank of England, all of whom are appointed by Her Majesty<sup>1</sup>.

Subject to Treasury directions<sup>2</sup>, the court of directors manages the affairs of the Bank of England (other than the formulation of monetary policy, which is the responsibility of the Bank's Monetary Policy Committee)<sup>3</sup>. In particular, the functions of the court of directors include determining the Bank's objectives (including objectives for its financial management) and its strategy<sup>4</sup>. In so doing, the aim of the court of directors is to ensure the effective discharge of the Bank's functions; but, subject to that, in determining objectives for the financial management of the Bank, its aim is to ensure the most efficient use of the Bank's resources<sup>5</sup>. The court of directors must also keep the procedures followed by the Monetary Policy Committee under review<sup>6</sup>; and, in particular, it must determine whether the Committee has collected the regional, sectoral and other information necessary for the purposes of formulating monetary policy<sup>7</sup>. The court of directors has custody of the Bank's seal<sup>8</sup>.

Certain functions of the court of directors are delegated to a sub-committee consisting of the directors of the Bank<sup>9</sup>. Those functions are:

- 1867 (1) keeping under review the Bank's performance in relation to the objectives and strategy for the time being determined by the court of directors<sup>10</sup>;
- 1868 (2) monitoring the extent to which the objectives set by the court of directors in relation to the Bank's financial management have been met<sup>11</sup>;
- 1869 (3) keeping under review the internal financial controls of the Bank with a view to securing the proper conduct of its financial affairs<sup>12</sup>;
- 1870 (4) determining how the functions relating to remuneration and pensions of executive members of the court of directors<sup>13</sup> should be exercised<sup>14</sup>; and
- 1871 (5) keeping under review the procedures followed by the Monetary Policy Committee<sup>15</sup>.

Provision is made as to the proceedings of the sub-committee, including the declaration of interests, and the further delegation of its functions to two or more of its members<sup>16</sup>.

796. Issue and recall of notes.

The Bank of England has the exclusive right of note issue in England and Wales<sup>1</sup>. The Bank may issue bank notes of such denominations as the Treasury may approve and no others<sup>2</sup>. Bank notes issued by the Bank may be put into circulation in Scotland and Northern Ireland as well as in England and Wales<sup>3</sup>.

Unless expressly made payable also at some other place, bank notes are payable only at the head office of the Bank<sup>4</sup>. Bank notes may be called in on the Bank's giving one month's notice in the London, Edinburgh and Belfast Gazettes, and on payment of their face value<sup>5</sup>.

On demand by the holder, bank notes of any denominations must be exchanged for bank notes of such lower denominations, being bank notes which for the time being are legal tender in the United Kingdom<sup>6</sup> or in England and Wales, as may be specified by him<sup>7</sup>.

The writing off of an amount from the total amount of bank notes issued from the issue department of the Bank of England does not affect the Bank's liability to pay any bank note included in the amount so written off<sup>8</sup>.

1 See the Bank Charter Act 1844 s 11 (amended by the Statute Law Revision Act 1891; and the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1928 Schedule). The amalgamation in 1921 of Messrs Fox, Fowler & Co of Wellington, Somerset, with Lloyds Bank Ltd marked the disappearance of the last private bank in England and Wales with note-issuing powers.

As to theft of notes etc see the Theft Act 1968 ss 1-7; and CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 282 et seq. As to counterfeiting of notes and related offences see the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 Pt II (ss 14-28); and CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 544 et seq.

2 Currency and Bank Notes Act 1954 s 1(1). 'Bank notes' means notes of the Bank of England payable to bearer on demand: s 3. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

5 Currency and Bank Notes Act 1954 s 1(5). Any such notes with respect to which a notice has been so given cease to be legal tender on the expiration of the notice: s 1(5). See further PARA 797.

6 As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 2 note 3.

7 Currency and Bank Notes Act 1954 s 1(4). The demand must be made during office hours at the head office of the Bank of England or, in the case of notes payable also at some place other than the head office, either at the head office or at that other place: s 1(4).

797. Notes as legal tender.

All bank notes of denominations approved by the Treasury<sup>1</sup> which are issued by the Bank of England are legal tender in England and Wales, and all such notes of denominations of less than £5 are legal tender in Scotland and Northern Ireland<sup>2</sup>. Notes called in by the Bank cease to be legal tender on the expiration of the calling-in notice<sup>3</sup>.

3 Currency and Bank Notes Act 1954 s 1(5). Currency notes issued under the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1914 (repealed) and not called in at 22 November 1928 were 'transferred currency notes' deemed to be bank notes (ie notes of the Bank of England), and the Bank of England was accordingly liable in respect of them: see the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1928 ss 4, 13(3). Transferred currency notes were called in pursuant to s 4(3) on 28 April 1933 and ceased to be legal tender on 1 August 1933.

BANKING/(2) CONSTITUTION OF BANKS/(i) Bank of England/798. Amount of issue and assets held in the issue department.

798. Amount of issue and assets held in the issue department.

The Bank of England may not cause the limit on the amount of the fiduciary note issue to be exceeded<sup>1</sup>; and for these purposes the limit is that specified in the Currency Act 1983 or such other amount as may from time to time be specified in a direction given by the Treasury<sup>2</sup>, which may not be greater than the former limit by more than 25 per cent<sup>3</sup>. Such a direction must be given by a Treasury minute, a copy of which must be laid before each House of Parliament<sup>4</sup>. By order made by statutory instrument the Treasury may direct that the 25 per cent limitation is not to apply to any such direction which is given during a specified period not exceeding two years beginning with the day on which the order is made<sup>5</sup>.

The Bank may write off from the total amount of notes issued from the issue department of the Bank the amount of any bank notes<sup>6</sup> which have not been presented for payment and which, by virtue of the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1954<sup>7</sup>, have ceased to be legal tender and have not been legal tender for ten years<sup>8</sup>. Any amount so written off must be deducted from the amount included in the next weekly account<sup>9</sup> as the amount of issued bank notes, and a return of the amount so written off must forthwith be sent to the Treasury, which must lay a copy of the return before each House of Parliament<sup>10</sup>.

In addition to the gold coin and bullion for the time being in the issue department, the Bank of England must appropriate to and hold in the issue department securities<sup>11</sup> of an amount in value sufficient to cover the fiduciary note issue for the time being<sup>12</sup>. Such securities may include silver coin<sup>13</sup> to an amount not exceeding £5.5 million<sup>14</sup>.

The Bank of England must give a weekly account, which must be periodically published, of the amount of notes issued and of the gold and silver bullion and securities in the issue department<sup>15</sup>.

The assets held in the issue department must be valued, at market prices, at such times and in such manner as may be agreed between the Treasury and the Bank, but at least once in each financial year<sup>16</sup>; and if, as a result of such valuation, the value of the assets then held falls short of the total amount of the Bank of England notes then outstanding, the Treasury must assume a liability to the issue department of an amount equal to the difference<sup>17</sup>. The profits of the issue department must ordinarily be paid into the National Loans Fund<sup>18</sup>; but so long as any part of a liability assumed by the Treasury is outstanding, the profits must be applied towards meeting that liability, instead of being paid into the National Loans Fund<sup>19</sup>.

- 1 Currency Act 1983 s 2(1).
- 2 Currency Act 1983 s 2(2). The limit specified in s 2(2) is £13,500 million, but the limit was increased to £16,500 million by a Treasury minute dated 17 December 1986. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

- 13 References to 'silver coin' in the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1928 s 3(2) include references to: (1) coin of cupro-nickel; and (2) coin specified in a proclamation made under the Coinage Act 1971 s 3(1)(cc) (see PARA 1282), not being coin of gold, silver or cupro-nickel or coin of a denomination of less than five pence: s 12(1), (2), Sch 2 (s 12(2) amended by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(7); and the Coinage Act 1971 Sch 2 amended by the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 Schedule Pt II; and by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1989).

798 Amount of issue and assets held in the issue department

TEXT AND NOTES 11-14--The expression 'securities' includes securities and assets in currency of any country and in whatever form held: Currency and Bank Notes Act 1928 s 3(4) (added by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 2008).

NOTE 11--Finance Act 1932 repealed: Statute Law (Repeals) Act 2008.

TEXT AND NOTE 15--Bank Charter Act 1844 s 6 repealed: Banking Act 2009 s 245.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(2) CONSTITUTION OF BANKS/(i) Bank of England/799. Stamp duty.

799. Stamp duty.

The notes of the Bank of England are exempt from all stamp duty, and the Bank is no longer liable to make any payment in consideration of this exemption<sup>1</sup>.

1 Specific provisions exempting Bank of England notes from stamp duty, and relieving it from liability to make payment in consideration of the exemption, were made by the Bank Charter Act 1844 s 7, and by the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1928 s 6(4), respectively. These enactments were repealed by the Finance Act 1972 Sch 28 Pt XI as they were no longer necessary in view of the repeal by that Act (see ss 126, 134, Sch 28 Pt XI) of the provisions of the Stamp Act 1891 relating to stamp duty on bank notes. As to stamp duty generally see STAMP DUTIES AND STAMP DUTY RESERVE TAX.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(2) CONSTITUTION OF BANKS/(i) Bank of England/800. Defective title or material alteration.

800. Defective title or material alteration.

A holder with no title or a defective title cannot compel payment of a bank note by the Bank of England<sup>1</sup>; but any person taking such a note honestly and for value acquires a good independent title to it and may enforce payment<sup>2</sup>.

Any material alteration in a bank note invalidates it, even in the hands of a holder in due course. An alteration of the number is a material alteration<sup>3</sup>.

2 Raphael v Governor & Co of Bank of England (1855) 17 CB 161, where a person taking, for full value and without knowledge that the party from whom he took had no title, was held entitled to payment even though he might have had the means of acquiring knowledge. The inability of a person with no title or a defective title to recover is not really an exception to the proposition that bank notes are currency. Honest acquisition is a condition of right, even to coin.

3 Suffell v Bank of England (1882) 9 QBD 555, CA, which is not affected by the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 64(1) proviso (see Leeds & County Bank Ltd v Walker (1883) 11 QBD 84 at 90), and which was distinguished in the case of accidental destruction of the number on a note or bill in Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corp v Lo Lee Shi [1928] AC 181, PC. See further PARA 1559. Any person who prints or stamps or by any like means impresses words, letters or figures on any bank note is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 1 on the standard scale for each offence: Currency and Bank Notes Act 1928 s 12 (amended by the Criminal Law Act 1977 s 31(6); and the Criminal Justice Act 1982 ss 37, 46). As to the standard scale see PARA 27 note 21.

BANKING/(2) CONSTITUTION OF BANKS/(i) Bank of England/801. Formulation of monetary policy by the Monetary Policy Committee.

801. Formulation of monetary policy by the Monetary Policy Committee.

The objectives of the Bank of England in relation to monetary policy are to maintain price stability, and, subject to that, to support the economic policy of the government, including its objectives for growth and employment<sup>1</sup>. The Treasury may by notice in writing to the Bank specify what price stability is to be taken to consist of, or what the government's economic policy is to be taken to be<sup>2</sup>.

The Monetary Policy Committee of the Bank of England has responsibility within the Bank for formulating monetary policy<sup>3</sup>.

As soon as practicable after each meeting of the Committee, the Bank must publish a statement<sup>4</sup> as to whether it was decided at the meeting that the Bank should take any action, other than action by way of intervening in financial markets, for the purpose of meeting its objectives and, if so, what the action is<sup>5</sup>. If, at any meeting, the Committee decides that the Bank should intervene in financial markets, it must also consider at the meeting whether immediate publication of the decision would be likely to impede or frustrate the achievement of the intervention's purpose<sup>6</sup>.

After each meeting of the Committee, the Bank must publish minutes of the meeting<sup>7</sup> before the end of the period of six weeks beginning with the day of the meeting<sup>8</sup>. However, this does not apply to minutes of any proceedings relating to a decision to intervene in financial markets, or a decision about the publication of a decision to intervene in financial markets, unless the Committee has decided that publication of the decision to intervene would not be likely, or would no longer be likely, to impede or frustrate the achievement of the intervention's purpose<sup>9</sup>. Minutes published must record, in relation to any decision of the Committee, the voting preference of the members who took part in the vote on the decision<sup>10</sup>.

The procedures of the Committee are kept under review by the court of directors<sup>11</sup>.

1 Bank of England Act 1998 s 11. The Treasury no longer has power to give directions to the Bank in relation to monetary policy, except in the circumstances set out in s 19: see PARA 803. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

2 Bank of England Act 1998 s 12(1). The Treasury must specify these matters at least once a year, and must publish the notice in such manner as it thinks fit and lay a copy of it before Parliament: s 12(2), (3).

As to the nationalising powers of the Treasury under the Banking (Special Provisions) Act 2008 see PARA 791.

3 Bank of England Act 1998 ss 13(1), 20. The Committee consists of: (1) the Governor and Deputy Governors of the Bank (s 13(2)(a)); (2) two members appointed by the Governor of the Bank after consultation with the Chancellor of the Exchequer (s 13(2)(b)); and (3) four members appointed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer (s 13(2)(c)). Of the two members appointed under head (2) above, one must be a person who has executive responsibility within the Bank for monetary policy analysis, and the other must be a person who has executive responsibility within the Bank for monetary policy operations: s 13(3). The Chancellor of the Exchequer must only appoint a person under head (3) above if he is satisfied that the person has knowledge or experience which is likely to be relevant to the Committee's functions: s 13(4). As to members' terms of office, appointments to and qualification for membership, and meetings and proceedings of the Committee, see Sch 3 paras 1-13. Members of the Committee are disqualified for membership of the House of Commons: Sch 3 para 15. The Committee must submit a monthly report on its activities to the court of directors of the Bank: Sch 3 para 14. As to the Chancellor of the Exchequer see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 514. As to the court of directors see PARA 795.

4 The statement must be published in such manner as the Bank thinks fit: Bank of England Act 1998 s 14(6).

5 Bank of England Act 1998 s 14(1).

6 Bank of England Act 1998 s 14(2). If the Committee decides that immediate publication of a decision would not have that effect, the Bank must, when it publishes its statement, publish a statement as to what action by way of intervening in financial markets the Committee has decided the Bank should take: s 14(3). If it is decided that immediate publication of a decision would have that effect, the Committee must keep under consideration the question of whether publication of the decision would still have that effect: s 14(4). As soon as practicable after the Committee has decided that publication of such a decision would no longer have that effect, the Bank must publish a statement as to what action by way of intervening in financial markets the Committee decided the Bank should take and when the decision was made: s 14(5).

7 The minutes must be published in such manner as the Bank thinks fit: Bank of England Act 1998 s 15(5).

8 Bank of England Act 1998 s 15(1).

9 Bank of England Act 1998 s 15(2). Minutes of proceedings relating to a decision to intervene in financial markets, or a decision about the publication of a decision to intervene in financial markets, if not required to be published before the end of the period of six weeks beginning with the day of the meeting, must be published by the Bank before the end of the period of six weeks beginning with the day on which a statement about the decision to intervene is published under s 14(5) (see note 6): s 15(3).

For this purpose, (1) a reference to the Bank of England is a reference to the Bank and anyone who acts or purports to act as a director, officer, servant or agent of the Bank; (2) 'immunity' means immunity from liability in damages in respect of action or inaction; and (3) a reference to the Bank's capacity as a monetary authority includes a reference to functions exercised by the Bank for the purpose of or in connection with (a) acting as the central bank of the United Kingdom; or (b) protecting or enhancing the stability of the financial systems of the United Kingdom: s 244(2). ### 803. Reserve powers of the Treasury.

After consultation with the Governor of the Bank of England<sup>1</sup>, the Treasury<sup>2</sup> may by order give the Bank directions with respect to monetary policy if it is satisfied that the directions are required in the public interest and by extreme economic circumstances<sup>3</sup>. Such an order which does not cease to have effect before the end of the period of three months beginning with the day on which it is made ceases to have effect at the end of that period<sup>4</sup>. While such an order made by the Treasury has effect, it overrides the provisions relating to the objectives of the Bank in relation to monetary policy<sup>5</sup>.

1 As to the Governor of the Bank of England see PARA 794.

2 As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

3 Bank of England Act 1998 s 19(1). Such an order may include such consequential modifications of the Bank of England Act 1998 relating to the Monetary Policy Committee as the Treasury thinks fit: s 19(2). As to the Monetary Policy Committee see PARA 801. Any power of the Treasury to make an order under the Bank of England Act 1998 is exercisable by statutory instrument: s 40(1). A statutory instrument containing an order under s 19 must be laid before Parliament after being made: ss 19(3), 40(5). Unless an order under s 19 is approved by resolution of each House of Parliament before the end of the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which it is made, it ceases to have effect at the end of that period: s 19(4). In reckoning the period of 28 days for the purposes of s 19(4), no account is to be taken of any time during which Parliament is dissolved or prorogued or during which either House is adjourned for more than four days: s 19(5). At the date at which this volume states the law no order had been made under s 19.

4 Bank of England Act 1998 s 19(6).

5 Bank of England Act 1998 s 19(7). As to the provisions relating to the objectives of the Bank in relation to monetary policy see s 11; and PARA 801.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(2) CONSTITUTION OF BANKS/(i) Bank of England/804. Cash ratio deposits.

804. Cash ratio deposits.

The Bank of England may give an eligible institution<sup>1</sup> a call notice<sup>2</sup>. A call notice must be in writing, and must specify the period to which it relates<sup>3</sup> and the amount which, in relation to that period, is the institution's depositable amount<sup>4</sup>. The depositable amount is the amount, or, as the case may be, the sum of the amounts, produced by multiplying so much of the institution's average liability base<sup>5</sup> for the reference period as falls into each value band by the ratio applicable to that band<sup>6</sup>.

Where the Bank has given an eligible institution a call notice, then, if at any time in the period to which the notice relates the following conditions are met, namely: (1) the institution is an eligible institution; and (2) the institution does not have on deposit in the appropriate account<sup>7</sup> with the Bank the amount specified in the notice as its depositable amount in relation to that period, the Bank may by notice<sup>8</sup> in writing require the institution to make a payment in lieu of deposit<sup>9</sup>.

The Bank may by notice<sup>10</sup> in writing require an eligible institution to provide such information as may be specified in the notice, being information which the Bank considers it necessary or expedient to have for the purposes of its functions in relation to cash ratio deposits<sup>11</sup>.

The provisions described above are modified in relation to the first call notice issued to an institution after it becomes an eligible institution<sup>12</sup>.

1 Each deposit-taker is an eligible institution for the purposes of the Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2: Sch 2 para 1(1) (Sch 2 para 1(1) substituted, and Sch 2 para 1(1A)-(1C) added, by SI 2001/3649). 'Deposit-taker' has the meaning given in the Bank of England Act 1998 s 17 (see PARA 802), except that it does not include: (1) a credit union; (2) a friendly society; (3) a person who has permission to accept deposits under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 Pt IV (ss 40-55) only in the course of effecting or carrying out contracts of insurance in accordance with that permission (see PARA 989 et seq); or (4) an EEA firm of the kind mentioned in the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 s 37, Sch 3 PARA 5(c) (see PARA 315): Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 1(1A) (as so added). 'Credit union' has the meaning given by the Credit Unions Act 1979 (see PARA 2402): Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 1(1B) (as so added). 'Friendly society' means: (a) a society which is registered within the meaning of the Friendly Societies Act 1974; or (b) a society incorporated under the Friendly Societies Act 1992 (see PARA 2082): Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 1(1C) (as so added).

The Treasury may by order amend Sch 2 para 1(1) and Sch 2 para 1(1A)-(1C) as it thinks fit: Sch 2 para 1(2) (amended by SI 2001/3649). Before making an order under the Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2, the Treasury must consult: (i) the Bank; (ii) such persons as appear to it to be representative of persons likely to be materially affected by the order; and (iii) such other persons as it thinks fit: Sch 2 para 10. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq. Any power of the Treasury to make an order under the Bank of England Act 1998 is exercisable by statutory instrument: s 40(1). An order under Sch 2 para 1(2) may not be made unless a draft of the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of each House of Parliament: s 40(2). At the date at which this volume states the law no order had been made under Sch 2 para 1(2).

2 Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 3(1).

3 The period to be specified must be a period of six months beginning at least four working days after the date of the notice, and may not include any part of a period specified in a previous call notice given to the institution concerned: Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 3(3).

4 Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 3(2).

5 The liability base of an eligible institution at any time is the aggregate of those sterling and foreign currency liabilities of the institution which are eligible liabilities: Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 2(1). The Treasury may by order define eligible liabilities and make provision about the calculation of any description of eligible liability, including provision for the amount of a liability of any description to be treated as reduced by the amount of an asset of any description: Sch 2 para 2(2). In exercising the power to make orders under the Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 2(2), the Treasury must have regard to the financial needs of the Bank: Sch 2 para 11. As to the making of orders under the Bank of England Act 1998 see note 1. A statutory instrument containing an order under Sch 2 para 2(2) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament: s 40(3). As to the order that has been made see the Cash Ratio Deposits (Eligible Liabilities) Order 1998, SI 1998/1130 (amended by SI 2000/2952; SI 2004/1862; SI 2005/3203).

6 Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 4(1). The Bank may use such method to calculate an institution's average liability base as it thinks fit, and may use different methods for different institutions: Sch 2 para 4(2). Value bands and the ratios applicable to them are such as may be specified by order made by the Treasury: Sch 2 paras 4(3), 5. As to the making of orders under the Bank of England Act 1998 see note 1. An order under Sch 2 para 5 may not be made unless a draft of the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of each House of Parliament: s 40(2). In exercising the power to make orders under Sch 2 para 5, the Treasury must have regard to the financial needs of the Bank: Sch 2 para 11. As to the order that has been made see the Cash Ratio Deposits (Value Bands and Ratios) Order 2004, SI 2004/1270.

7 The appropriate account, in relation to an eligible institution, is such account of the institution with the Bank as is designated by the Bank for the purpose: Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 6(5).

8 The notice must specify what period it covers, and the period specified must: (1) fall within the period to which the call notice relates; and (2) be a period throughout which the conditions mentioned in heads (1) and (2) in the text have been met: Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 6(2).

9 Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 6(1). The amount which the Bank may require an institution to pay is an amount equal to interest for the period covered by the notice, at 4% over the benchmark rate, on the average shortfall during that period: Sch 2 para 6(3), (6).

As to the determination of the benchmark rate of interest see Sch 2 para 7, which may be amended by order under Sch 2 para 8. As to the making of orders under the Bank of England Act 1998 see note 1. A statutory instrument containing an order under Sch 2 para 8 is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament: s 40(3). At the date at which this volume states the law no order had been made under Sch 2 para 8.

The Bank may use such method to calculate the average shortfall as it thinks fit: Sch 2 para 6(4).

10 Such a notice may require information to be provided: (1) in such form or manner as may be specified in the notice; (2) at such time or times as may be so specified; (3) in relation to such period or periods as may be so specified: Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 9(2).

11 Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 9(1). As to restrictions on disclosure of such information see PARA 805. Sections 38, 39 (offences in relation to the provision of information) apply to a requirement under Sch 2 para 9: see PARA 802 note 5.

12 See the Bank of England Act 1998 Sch 2 para 13.

806. Annual report and accounts.

As soon as practicable after the end of each of its financial years, the Bank of England must make to the Chancellor of the Exchequer<sup>1</sup> a report on its activities in that year<sup>2</sup>. The Bank must publish every report in such manner as it thinks appropriate<sup>3</sup>, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer is required to lay copies of every report before Parliament<sup>4</sup>.

The Bank has a duty to keep proper accounts and records in relation to the accounts<sup>5</sup>. It must prepare for each of its financial years a statement of accounts consisting of a balance sheet as at the last day of the year, and a profit and loss account<sup>6</sup>. The Bank must appoint an auditor or auditors to audit its accounts, including any statement of accounts<sup>7</sup>. As soon as practicable after receiving the report of its auditors on a statement, the Bank must send a copy of the report and the statement to the Chancellor of the Exchequer<sup>8</sup>.

After consulting the Bank, the Treasury<sup>9</sup> may by notice in writing to the Bank require it to publish in such manner as it thinks fit such additional information relating to its accounts as the Treasury may specify in the notice<sup>10</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> As to the Chancellor of the Exchequer see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 514.

<sup>2</sup> Bank of England Act 1998 s 4(1). The report must, in particular, contain: (1) a report by the directors of the Bank on the matters for which the sub-committee constituted by s 3 is responsible (see PARA 795); and (2) a copy of the statement for the year prepared under s 7(2) and the report of the Bank's auditors on it (see the text and notes 6-7): s 4(2). The report mentioned in head (1) above must, in particular, include a review of the Bank's performance in relation to its objectives and strategy, as determined by the court of directors of the Bank, in the financial year to which the report relates: s 4(3). A report must also contain: (a) a statement of the rate or rates at which directors of the Bank have been remunerated in the financial year to which the report relates; and (b) a statement of the Bank's objectives and strategy, as determined by the court of directors of the Bank, for the financial year in which the report is made: s 4(4). The Bank may disregard a requirement to which it is subject under s 7(3) to the extent that it considers it appropriate to do so having regard to its functions: s 7(4). In s 7(3), the reference to 'the relevant Companies Act requirements' is a reference to the requirements to which the directors of a company which is a banking company for the purposes of the Companies Act 2006 are for the time being subject under that Act (except ss 412, 413 (directors' benefits)) in relation to the preparation of accounts under s 394 (see COMPANIES vol 15 (2009) PARA 716): see the Bank of England Act 1998 s 7(9) (amended by SI 2008/948).

807. Bank of England's other powers and duties.

The Bank of England must keep registers of the holders of specified stocks<sup>1</sup> and bonds<sup>2</sup>. Gilts are registrable in the books of the Bank, following the closure to gilts of the National Savings Stock Register<sup>3</sup>.

The Bank may lend any sums which the Treasury<sup>4</sup> has power to borrow<sup>5</sup> in connection with the National Debt<sup>6</sup>.

The Bank of England no longer has statutory power to establish branches in any part of England<sup>7</sup>.

The Bank's supervisory role in the regulation of banking business under the Banking Act 1987 has been removed and that role is now performed by the Financial Services Authority<sup>8</sup>.

Apart from the monetary policy objective in the Bank of England Act 1998<sup>9</sup>, the Bank now has no general statutory objectives<sup>10</sup> but it has two core purposes<sup>11</sup> of monetary stability and financial stability. Monetary stability relates to stable prices<sup>12</sup> and confidence in the currency and financial stability involves the detection and reduction of threats to the financial system as a whole<sup>13</sup>. The Bank in pursuit of both the core purposes communicates its views and works closely with others including the Treasury and the Authority<sup>14</sup> and other central banks<sup>15</sup> and international organisations to improve the international monetary system.

As to the National Savings Stock Register see PARA 1347. 'Gilts' are stocks or bonds of any description included in the Finance Act 1942 Sch 11 Pt I (see PARA 1347 note 8); Bank of England Act 1998 s 33(6); National Savings Stock Register (Closure of Register to Gilts) Order 1998, SI 1998/1446, art 2(1).

<sup>7</sup> The Country Bankers Act 1826 s 15, which conferred such powers, was repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act 1958 s 1, Sch 1.

<sup>8</sup> As to the Financial Services Authority see PARA 792; and PARAS 4, 6 et seq.

10 The Bank's functions as seen by the Treasury, the Authority and the Bank itself are described in the Memorandum of Understanding between them, issued in October 1997 and revised in March 2006.

11 It is as determined by the court of directors in its role in setting the Bank's objectives and strategy: see PARA 795. These core purposes were reaffirmed by a statement in March 2007. See also note 13.

12 Stable prices relate back to the government's inflation target, which the Bank seeks to meet through decisions on interest rates taken by the Monetary Policy Committee: see PARA 120.

13 The Bank has responsibility for the stability of the financial system as a whole while the Authority supervises individual banks and other financial organisations. In this role the Bank has surveillance and market intelligence functions. Threats to the financial system as a whole are reduced by strengthening the infrastructure and various financial operations both nationally and internationally, including in exceptional circumstances by acting as the 'lender of last resort' to financial institutions in difficulty (eg in the Northern Rock plc crisis of 2007/2008 but see also PARA 791 note 28). This is part of the Bank's central banking functions and would be exercised to prevent loss of confidence spreading through the system as a whole: it is set out in the Memorandum of Understanding (see note 10). Related to this is the Bank's role in oversight of payment systems (payment and settlement systems being at the centre of the financial infrastructure), its main objective being to ensure that sufficient weight is given to risk reduction and management in their design and operation while taking into account the potential effect of risk mitigation measures on system efficiency. The Bank's principal focus is on the UK payment systems and its oversight activities and priorities are set out in an annual Payment Systems Oversight Report. The Bank also takes part in a joint Working Group of the European System of Central Banks (ESCB) (see note 15) and the Committee of European Securities Regulators (CESR) on standards for securities settlement systems.

As to the nationalising powers of the Treasury under the Banking (Special Provisions) Act 2008 generally see PARA 791.

14 See the Memorandum of Understanding; and note 10.

15 The Bank is a member of the European System of Central Banks (ESCB) which comprises the European Central Bank (ECB) and the national central banks of all 27 EU member states. See also PARA 1398 note 5. At the date at which this volume states the law, the website for the ECB and ESCB is www.ecb.int.

807A. Financial stability.

1. Financial stability objective

An objective of the Bank of England is to contribute to protecting and enhancing the stability of the financial systems of the United Kingdom (the 'financial stability objective'): Bank of England Act 1998 s 2A(1) (s 2A added by the Banking Act 2009 s 238(1)). In pursuing the financial stability objective the Bank must aim to work with other relevant bodies, including the Treasury and the Financial Services Authority: Bank of England Act 1998 s 2A(2). The court of directors must, consulting the Treasury, determine and review the Bank's strategy in relation to the financial stability objective: Bank of England Act 1998 s 2A(3).

2. Financial Stability Committee

There is to be a sub-committee of the court of directors of the Bank of England (the 'Financial Stability Committee') consisting of (1) the Governor of the Bank, who is to chair the Committee (when present); (2) the Deputy Governors of the Bank; and (3) four directors of the Bank, appointed by the chair of the court of directors: Bank of England Act 1998 s 2B(1) (ss 2B, 2C added by the Banking Act 2009 s 238(1)). The Committee has the following functions: (a) to make recommendations to the court of directors, which it must consider, about the nature and implementation of the Bank's strategy in relation to the financial stability objective (see PARA 807A.1); (b) to give advice about whether and how the Bank should act in respect of an institution, where the issue appears to the Committee to be relevant to the financial stability objective; (c) in particular, to give advice about whether and how the Bank should use stabilisation powers under the Banking Act 2009 Pt 1 (ss 1-89) (see PARA 791A) in particular cases; (d) to monitor the Bank's use of the stabilisation powers; (e) to monitor the Bank's exercise of its functions under the Banking Act 2009 Pt 5 (ss 181-206) (see PARA 791D); and (f) any other functions delegated to the Committee by the court of directors for the purpose of pursuing the financial stability objective: Bank of England Act 1998 s 2B(2). As to the procedure of the Committee see the Bank of England Act 1998 ss 2B(3), 2C.

3. Information

The Bank of England may disclose information that it thinks relevant to the financial stability of individual financial institutions or one or more aspects of the financial systems of the United Kingdom: Banking Act 2009 s 246(1). Information about the business or other affairs of a specified or identifiable person may be disclosed only to (1) the Treasury; (2) the Financial Services Authority; (3) the scheme manager of the Financial Services Compensation Scheme; (4) an authority in a country or territory outside the United Kingdom which exercises functions similar to those of the Treasury, the Bank of England or the Financial Services Authority in relation to financial stability; and (5) the European Central Bank: Banking Act 2009 s 246(2). These provisions (a) override a contractual or other requirement to keep information in confidence; and (b) are without prejudice to any other power to disclose information: Banking Act 2009 s 246(3). As to the duty of the Financial Services Authority to collect information relating to financial stability see the Banking Act 2009 s 250; and PARA 447 TEXT AND NOTES.

(ii) Banks Generally

808. Origin and constitution of banks.

The development of joint stock banks began in 1826, when corporate bodies, or co-partnerships, unlimited in number, were authorised to carry on banking business, both deposit and issue, outside a radius of 65 miles from London<sup>1</sup>. In 1833, the carrying on of banking other than issue business within London and that radius by corporations, companies or partnerships, irrespective of the number of members, was recognised as permissible<sup>2</sup>.

In 1837, powers were given to the Crown to grant charters of incorporation to trading companies, including banking companies<sup>3</sup>, and provision was made for the renewal or extension of such charters<sup>4</sup>.

A system of constituting banks of more than six persons by letters patent was instituted in 1844. Pre-existing banks under the legislation of 1826 and 1833 were given the option of coming under the new system by petitioning for letters patent, but, if in operation before 6 May 1844, were not compelled to do so<sup>5</sup>. The powers and privileges of banks formed within the 65-mile radius under the 1833 legislation were assimilated to those formed outside it under the legislation of 1826<sup>6</sup>, except with regard to the right to issue notes<sup>7</sup>.

In 1857, a limit of ten members was imposed on all unregistered partnerships carrying on the business<sup>8</sup> of banking<sup>9</sup>, but partnerships of not more than ten were authorised to carry on banking business in all respects as any partnership of not more than six, before the passing of the Joint Stock Banking Companies Act 1857, could then do<sup>10</sup>. At the same time all banks consisting of seven or more members formed under the 1844 legislation were compelled to register with unlimited liability<sup>11</sup>. Those of the earlier joint stock banks or companies which had merely availed themselves of the privileges of the 1844 scheme were not affected, nor were any of the banks existing prior to 1844 which had merely stood on their rights; any of such banks, however, if consisting of more than seven members, or any new coalition of more than seven persons, was entitled to register as a banking company with unlimited liability<sup>12</sup>.

In 1858, banking companies, whether already registered or newly formed, were permitted to register with limited liability, save as to note issue, if any<sup>13</sup>.

All banks formed or registered under the legislation of 1857 and 1858 were made subject to the company legislation of 1862<sup>14</sup>, as if registered under it. This legislation, as subsequently amended and consolidated<sup>15</sup>, governs their constitution and that of all banks incorporated since 1862 otherwise than by royal charter or special Act of Parliament. Banks came into the regime of the company legislation as limited or unlimited according to their previous constitution<sup>16</sup>, but no existing or new bank could by registering with limited liability preclude the liability of its shareholders being unlimited with regard to note issue, if any<sup>17</sup>. In 1879 banking companies registered as unlimited were afforded the opportunity of registering as limited<sup>18</sup>.

(iii) Savings Banks

A. TRUSTEE SAVINGS BANKS

809. Reorganisation of trustee savings banks.

The Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 was passed<sup>1</sup> for the purpose of enabling the then existing TSB group<sup>2</sup> to be reorganised into the new TSB group<sup>3</sup>. The Act provided for the transfer and vesting<sup>4</sup> of property, rights, liabilities and obligations and for the transfer of the business of each of the existing banks to its successor<sup>5</sup>; and the transfer included customers' accounts and rights, liabilities and obligations under contracts which are not normally capable of being transferred or assigned<sup>6</sup>.

The new TSB group was required to seek authority as necessary to take deposits; and its customers' accounts were governed by the normal relationship of banker and customer<sup>7</sup>. The Trustee Savings Banks Central Board was given additional powers to assist in the reorganisation<sup>8</sup>; and following the completion of that task, was wound up by the Treasury<sup>9</sup>.

1 The Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 received the Royal Assent on 25 July 1985 and came into force on 25 September 1985: s 7(2). For a description of the legislative history of trustee savings banks from 1817 until their reorganisation in 1985 see Ross v Lord Advocate [1986] 3 All ER 79 at 84-93, [1986] 1 WLR 1077 at 1084-1095, HL, per Lord Templeman.

2 'Existing TSB group' means the following, taken as a whole:

686 (1) the existing trustee savings banks certified under the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1969 or the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1981 (the 'existing banks');

687 (2) the Trustee Savings Banks Central Board (the 'Central Board');

688 (3) Trustee Savings Banks (Holdings) Limited (the 'existing holding company'); and

689 (4) the existing subsidiaries of any of the existing banks, the Central Board or the existing holding company, and 'existing' with reference to any of those banks or companies means existing immediately before 21 July 1986 (see note 4) and, in the case of a bank, with a certification under the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1969 or the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1981 effective on 17 December 1984: Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 s 1(1)(a).

3 Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 s 1(5). 'New TSB group' means the following, taken as a whole: (1) the companies formed or to be formed with objects including that of assuming and conducting, after 21 July 1986 (see note 4), the respective businesses of the existing banks and eligible to succeed them; (2) the companies which, immediately before 21 July 1986, were subsidiaries of the existing banks, the Central Board or the existing holding company (see note 2); (3) the company formed or to be formed with objects including that of acting as the holding company for the companies falling within heads (1) and (2) above and which, immediately before 21 July 1986, was a subsidiary of the Central Board (the 'new holding company'): s 1(1)(b).

4 The vesting day under the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 was to be appointed by the Treasury by order made by statutory instrument after consulting the Central Board: s 1(4). In exercise of the power so conferred, the Treasury appointed 21 July 1986 as the vesting day: see the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 (Appointed Day) (No 3) Order 1986, SI 1986/1222, art 2. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

5 See the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 s 3, Sch 1 (s 3 amended by the Employment Rights Act 1996 Sch 1 para 27; and the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 Sch 1 amended by the Banking Act 1987 Sch 6 para 19, Sch 7 Pt I; the Building Societies Act 1986 s 120, Sch 19 Pt I; SI 2001/3649; and SI 2002/1501). At the date of the passing of the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985, the depositors had no proprietary interest in the surplus assets of the existing trustee savings banks and accordingly by s 3(3) such assets were transferred to the successor company: Ross v Lord Advocate [1986] 3 All ER 79, [1986] 1 WLR 1077, HL.

6 See the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 s 3(6).

7 See PARA 815 et seq. The TSB group was acquired by Lloyds Bank plc in 1994, and thus no longer exists as an independent entity.

8 See the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 s 2 (repealed by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 2004).

9 See the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 s 2(4) (repealed: see note 8); and the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 (Appointed Day) (No 7) Order 1990, SI 1990/1982. As to the dissolution of the existing banks and the repeal of the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1981 see the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 s 4 (amended by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 2004); the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 (Appointed Day) (No 2) Order 1986, SI 1986/1220; the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 (Appointed Day) (No 4) Order 1986, SI 1986/1223; and the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 (Appointed Day) (No 6) Order 1988, SI 1988/1168.

B. THE NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK

810. The National Savings Bank.

The National Savings Bank (formerly known as the Post Office Savings Bank) exists for the receipt and repayment of deposits, and its business is carried on by the Director of Savings<sup>1</sup> who is appointed by the Treasury<sup>2</sup>. Regulations may be made by the Treasury for superintending, inspecting and regulating the manner in which accounts of depositors are kept and examined, and with respect to the making of deposits and the withdrawal of deposits and interest<sup>3</sup>. The National Savings Bank provided facilities for certified contractual savings schemes<sup>4</sup> and under the Savings Contracts Regulations 1969 savings contracts may be administered by the Director of Savings<sup>5</sup>.

1 National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 1. The Director of Savings may authorise another person, or that person's employees, to exercise certain of the Director's functions: see the Contracting Out (Functions Relating to National Savings) Order 1998, SI 1998/1449.

2 National Debt Act 1972 s 1(1). Unless required by any Act to be borne in some other manner, any expenses of the Director of Savings must be defrayed out of money provided by Parliament: s 1(2). As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 e seq.

3 National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 2(1). Regulations may also be made as to particular matters: see s 8 (amended by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 2 para 1, Sch 20 para 1; and the Finance Act 2003 s 208). Regulations may restrict the classes of persons who may open accounts with the National Savings Bank, but any such restriction does not apply to any account opened before the coming into force of the regulations imposing the restriction: National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 2(1A) (added by the Finance Act 1989 s 184(1)). As to the regulations in force at the date at which this volume states the law see the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764 (amended by SI 1974/553; SI 1978/888; SI 1981/484; SI 1982/1282; SI 1982/1762; SI 1983/1750; SI 1984/9; SI 1984/602; SI 1986/2001; SI 1988/1166; SI 1988/2144; SI 1989/25; SI 1989/2045; SI 1991/72; SI 1992/2892; SI 1996/801; SI 1996/1724; SI 1998/1446; SI 1999/588; SI 1999/1611; SI 2001/858; SI 2003/2895; SI 2004/1662; SI 2006/1066; SI 2007/1265; SI 2008/734). Any provision which may be made in relation to investment deposits by regulations under the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 2 may, in the case of deposits in investment accounts of any description first made available after the passing of the Finance Act 2003, be included instead in the terms and conditions of the accounts, although any such provision has effect subject to regulations under the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 2 and orders under s 4 (see PARA 812): s 9A(1), (2) (s 9A added by the Finance Act 2003 s 208). For these purposes, 'terms and conditions' means terms and conditions set by the Treasury and published by the Director of Savings in a manner approved by the Treasury: National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 9A(3) (as so added). As to investment deposits see PARA 812.

Any power to make regulations, orders or warrants under the National Savings Bank Act 1971 is exercisable by statutory instrument: s 26(1). A statutory instrument containing regulations under s 2, or an order under s 4 (see PARA 812), is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament: s 26(2) (substituted by the Finance Act 2000 s 152(2)). As to the procedure for statutory instruments made under the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 11 (see PARA 811 note 1) see s 26(4).

BANKING/(2) CONSTITUTION OF BANKS/(iii) Savings Banks/B. THE NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK/811. Kinds of deposit.

811. Kinds of deposit.

A deposit with the National Savings Bank may be made either as an ordinary deposit or as an investment deposit<sup>1</sup>. Treasury regulations<sup>2</sup> may make different provision with respect to ordinary deposits, investment deposits and investment deposits of different descriptions, and may prevent the making of an investment deposit or an investment deposit of a particular description unless the person who will be the depositor in respect of the investment deposit is also a depositor in respect of ordinary deposits and the sum due to him in respect of those deposits is not less than such amount as may be specified in the regulations<sup>3</sup>.

An ordinary deposit of less than £10, and an investment deposit of less than £20, may only be made at the principal office of the National Savings Bank unless the Director of Savings, in any case in which he thinks fit, accepts any such deposit made at any other savings bank office<sup>4</sup>. Where an account is opened, a deposit book must be issued to the depositor in which deposits are to be duly entered<sup>5</sup>. Where investment deposits are to be made by or on behalf of a depositor, a separate account must be opened and a separate deposit book must be issued in respect of those deposits<sup>6</sup>.

1 National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 3(1). This is subject to any provision made in relation to ordinary accounts or ordinary deposits by regulations under s 2 (see PARA 810) made by virtue of s 8(3) (see PARA 810): s 3(1A) (added by the Finance Act 2003 s 208). As to the making of regulations see PARA 810 note 3. As to the management of ordinary deposits see PARA 813; and as to investment deposits see PARA 812.

2 The regulations made by the Treasury under the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 2: see PARA 810. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

3 National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 3(2) (amended by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 20 para 2).

4 See the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 8(1)(e); and the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, regs 20, 28(5) (both substituted by SI 1988/2144; and amended by SI 1992/2892).

5 See the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, regs 16, 19. The Treasury's power to make regulations under the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 2 (see PARA 810) includes power to make regulations for the giving of statements of accounts or the issuing of depositors' books and for prescribing the entries to be made in such books: s 8(1)(b) (substituted by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 20 para 1). Except in such cases as the Director of Savings may direct, every person who may properly sign an application to withdraw deposits must sign his name in the space provided in the book: National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, reg 16(2). No charge may be made for a deposit book, which is the property of the Director of Savings and must be delivered up as and when required by him: reg 16(3), (4). Every depositor must, at such times as the Director of Savings may direct and whenever required, forward to the Director of Savings the deposit book relating to any account in his name: reg 17. On the application of a depositor, the Director of Savings may, if he thinks fit, issue a new deposit book to replace a lost one; and if in his opinion any deposit book has been tampered with or is in such a condition as to render the issue of a new book desirable, he may, if he thinks fit, require the surrender and cancellation of the book and issue a new book to the depositor: reg 18(1), (2). Notwithstanding anything in the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, the Director of Savings may pay any sum in respect of any amount in the National Savings Bank without the production of the deposit book where he is satisfied that the depositor or other claimant is entitled to receive that sum: reg 18(3).

811 Kinds of deposit

TEXT AND NOTE 4--SI 1972/764 reg 28(6) (conditions for making investment deposits pursuant to telephone instructions) added: SI 2008/1164.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(2) CONSTITUTION OF BANKS/(iii) Savings Banks/B. THE NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK/812. Investment deposits.

812. Investment deposits.

Investment deposits<sup>1</sup> are received on such terms as to notice of withdrawal<sup>2</sup> and interest<sup>3</sup> (other than terms as to rate of interest) as the Treasury may from time to time prescribe, and in respect of interest different terms may be prescribed in relation to different descriptions of investment deposits<sup>4</sup>. The Treasury may by order prescribe an amount as the minimum balance for investment accounts and may provide for converting into a different description of investment account any account into which investment deposits of any description are made if the balance of that account falls below the minimum balance so prescribed for an account of that description<sup>5</sup>.

The maximum amount which any person may have in an investment deposit account (except for the credit of a treasurer's account or an individual savings account) or in one or more such accounts, whether solely or jointly with any other person, is £100,000<sup>6</sup>. The maximum amount that may be credited to a treasurer's account is £2,000,000<sup>7</sup>. The maximum deposit for crediting to an individual savings account is £3,600 in any year beginning on 6 April<sup>8</sup>. Interest on investment deposits is payable at such rates as the Treasury may from time to time determine, and different rates may be so determined in relation to different descriptions of investment deposits and different periods of notice of withdrawal<sup>9</sup>.

All sums received by the Director of Savings as investment deposits with the National Savings Bank must from time to time be paid by him into the National Loans Fund in accordance with directions given by the Treasury; and the sums required for repaying, or paying interest on, investment deposits with the National Savings Bank are to be charged on that Fund with recourse to the Consolidated Fund<sup>10</sup>. However, there may be retained by the Director of Savings out of the sums so received by him such amounts as may be required by him as a working balance; and there must be paid to him from time to time out of the National Loans Fund or, as the case may be, the Consolidated Fund, the sums required for repaying, or paying interest on, investment deposits or for increasing his working balance<sup>11</sup>.

1 As to the different kinds of deposit see PARA 811.

2 Except where the Director of Savings otherwise directs, money deposited in a treasurer's account by way of investment deposit, or any interest thereon, may not be withdrawn or transferred, except to an investment deposit account, unless the relevant prior notice of withdrawal or transfer in the approved form has been given to the Director of Savings: National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 7(2) (substituted by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 20 para 6(b)); National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, reg 29(1) (reg 29 substituted by SI 1996/801; and the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, reg 29(1) amended by SI 1996/1724 and SI 2006/1066). The relevant prior notice is 30 days: National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, reg 29(1A) (reg 29 as so substituted; and reg 29(1A) added by SI 1996/1724 and amended by SI 2006/1066). Withdrawals and transfers from accounts other than a treasurer's account are governed by comparable provisions contained in the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, reg 28A (added by SI 2006/1066).

3 'Interest', in relation to investment deposits, includes any bonus or other payment, whether payable annually or otherwise, which constitutes income derived from the whole or any part of the deposits: National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 27 (definition added by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 20 para 8). As to the calculation of interest see the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, reg 42 (amended by SI 1983/1750; SI 1996/1724; SI 1999/588; SI 1999/1611).

4 See the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 6(1) (amended by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 20 para 5(2)); and the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 7(2) (amended by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 20 para 6(b)). As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

5 National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 4(1A) (added by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 20 para 3(1)). As to the making of orders under the National Savings Bank Act 1971 see PARA 810 note 3.

6 See the National Savings Bank (Investment Deposits) (Limits) Order 1977, SI 1977/1210, art 3 (amended by SI 1993/1239; SI 1996/1854; SI 1999/1056). See note 8. The National Savings Bank (Investment Deposits) (Limits) Order 1977, SI 1977/1210, art 3 does not apply to an investment account of any description for which terms and conditions have been set pursuant to the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 9A(1) (see PARA 810 note 3): National Savings Bank (Investment Deposits) (Limits) Order 1977, SI 1977/1210, art 3ZA (added by SI 2003/2895).

7 National Savings Bank (Investment Deposits) (Limits) Order 1977, SI 1977/1210, art 3A (added by SI 1996/1854). See note 8. As to treasurer's accounts see the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, regs 29A-29K (all added by SI 1996/1724; and the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, reg 29H amended by SI 2006/1066; and the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, reg 29K amended by SI 1999/588).

Notwithstanding the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, regs 21, 29, 29A, 29B(3), 29F-29H, 29K (see also PARA 823): (1) a treasurer's account may not be opened after 10 May 2007; (2) no deposit may be made to the credit of a treasurer's account after 10 August 2007; and (3) any withdrawal from a treasurer's account after 10 August 2007 must be a withdrawal of the balance standing to the credit of the account at the date of withdrawal and any accrued interest that has not been credited to the account: reg 2C (regs 2C, 2D added by SI 2007/1265). If a valid application to withdraw the whole amount referred to in the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, reg 2C(c) (see head (3) above) from a treasurer's account has not been made before 10 November 2007, the Director of Savings may transfer the balance standing to the credit of that account and any accrued interest that has not been credited to that account to a special Director's account: reg 2D (as so added).

8 National Savings Bank (Investment Deposits) (Limits) Order 1977, SI 1977/1210, art 3B (added by SI 1999/1056; and amended by SI 2001/858; SI 2008/734). As to individual savings accounts see the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, regs 29L-29R (all added by SI 1999/588; and the National Savings Bank Regulations 1972, SI 1972/764, reg 29L amended by SI 1999/1611; SI 2001/858; SI 2005/2114).

Nothing in the National Savings Bank (Investment Deposits) (Limits) Order 1977, SI 1977/1210, art 3, art 3A or art 3B operates to prevent: (1) the receipt or crediting of any amount allowed by the National Savings Bank to a depositor by way of interest in respect of his investment deposit account; (2) the receipt or crediting of any amount transferred from the investment deposit account of another depositor in the National Savings Bank who has died; (3) the crediting of any amount by the Director of Savings under the National Savings Stock Register Regulations 1976, SI 1976/2012, reg 45 (see PARA 814) or paid under the National Savings Stock Register (Closure of Register to Gilts) Order 1998, SI 1998/1446, art 21 (see PARA 1347); (4) the receipt or crediting of any amount received or credited in contravention of art 21 from being treated as having been lawfully received or credited for such period as the Director of Savings, in his discretion, thinks appropriate provided that at the time the amount was received or credited the Director was unaware of the contravention and provided also that the Director considers it just and reasonable that the amount should be so treated; (5) the receipt of any amount for, or the crediting of any amount to, any account of the Accountant General of the Supreme Court of Judicature of Northern Ireland; or (6) the receipt or crediting of any amount to an individual savings account of a sum transferred by an account manager pursuant to the Individual Savings Account Regulations 1998, SI 1998/1870: see the National Savings Bank (Investment Deposits) (Limits) Order 1977, SI 1977/1210, art 4(1) (substituted by SI 1981/108; and amended by SI 1987/329; SI 1988/1030; SI 1998/1446; SI 1999/2060; SI 2000/1421). A trustee is treated separately in his personal capacity and in his capacity as trustee and separately in respect of each trust fund: see the National Savings Bank (Investment Deposits) (Limits) Order 1977, SI 1977/1210, art 4(2), (3).

9 National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 6(2) (amended by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 20 para 5(2); and the Finance Act 2003 s 208). The Treasury may determine that the rate is to be produced by the operation of a formula: see the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 6(2ZA) (added by the Finance Act 2003 s 208). Without prejudice to the generality of the National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 6(2), the Treasury may determine, in relation to an account into which investment deposits of any description are made, different rates of interest by reference to one or more of the following factors, namely: (1) the balance of that account at any time or over any period or the aggregate balance of that account and the depositor's other accounts of the same description, or the depositor's other investment accounts of any description, at any time or over any period; and (2) the number of withdrawals from that account over any period or the number of withdrawals from that account and the depositor's other accounts of the same description, or the depositor's other investment accounts of any description, over any period: s 6(2A) (added by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 20 para 5(3)).

The Director of Savings must give notice in the London, Edinburgh and Belfast Gazettes of any alteration in a rate of interest payable on investment deposits or investment deposits of a particular description (other than one occasioned by the operation of a formula); and any such alteration may affect deposits received at or before, as well as after, the time the alteration is made: National Savings Bank Act 1971 s 6(3) (amended by the Finance Act 1982 Sch 20 para 5(4); and the Finance Act 2003 s 208).

10 Finance Act 1980 s 120(1). As to the National Loans Fund and the Consolidated Fund see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARAS 711 et seq, 727 et seq; PARLIAMENT vol 78 (2010) PARAS 1028-1031.

11 Finance Act 1980 s 120(2). The amounts to be retained by or paid to the Director of Savings must be determined by agreement between him and the Treasury: s 120(3). The expenses of the Director of Savings in connection with investment deposits are to be defrayed out of moneys provided by Parliament: s 120(6).

813. Management of ordinary deposits.

The balance of ordinary deposits received in excess of the amount required to meet withdrawals must be paid over to, and invested by, the National Debt Commissioners, after deducting expenses incurred by them and by the Director of Savings<sup>1</sup>. The Director of Savings and the National Debt Commissioners must prepare annual statements with respect to matters relating to ordinary deposits and expenses<sup>2</sup>. If in any period the aggregate of the sums accrued by way of interest on the investment of surplus deposits<sup>3</sup>, after deduction of any sum required by the Treasury to be set aside to provide for depreciation in the value of the investments so made, exceeds the aggregate of:

1872 (1) the aggregate of the sums paid or credited during that period by way of interest on ordinary deposits; and then the excess must be paid into the Consolidated Fund<sup>4</sup>. If in any period the aggregate of the sums that so accrued, after deduction of any sum required to be so set aside, falls short of the second-mentioned aggregate, the deficiency must be made good out of that Fund<sup>5</sup>.

BANKING/(2) CONSTITUTION OF BANKS/(iii) Savings Banks/B. THE NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK/814. Regulation of deposit and withdrawal.

814. Regulation of deposit and withdrawal.

Regulations for the conduct of business by the National Savings Bank are made by the Treasury<sup>1</sup>. The Treasury may by order limit the amount which may be received by way of deposit in the National Savings Bank from any person whatsoever either in one year or in the aggregate; and the limit which a person may have in an ordinary deposit account or accounts, whether solely or jointly with any other person, is £10,000, exclusive of money deposited or credited for specified purposes<sup>2</sup>. The Director of Savings may, with the consent of the Treasury, from time to time determine the rate or rates at which interest is to be payable on amounts deposited in ordinary accounts or determine that no interest is to be payable on such amounts<sup>3</sup>.

Deposits may be made by and in the name of any person who has attained the age of seven years and who is not under any legal disability, otherwise than by reason of his age<sup>4</sup>. Deposits may also be made on behalf of and in the name of a minor under the age of seven years, and of a person who lacks capacity<sup>5</sup>. Trust accounts may be opened<sup>6</sup>.

A depositor may apply to transfer deposits standing in his name into the name of any other depositor or into an account to be opened in the name of any person entitled to make deposits in the National Savings Bank; and, if the Director of Savings is satisfied as to the applicant's title, the death of the applicant before the transfer is effected will not, in the absence of notice, determine his authority for the transfer to be made<sup>7</sup>.

Withdrawals may be made by a depositor<sup>8</sup> on written application in the approved form, payments being made by warrant unless otherwise directed by the Director of Savings<sup>9</sup>.

Where the total amount due to a depositor at the date of his death does not exceed £5,000, the Director of Savings may dispense with probate or letters of administration and pay the amount due, or any part of it, to a person who has a beneficial interest in the deceased's estate or falls within certain other specified categories<sup>10</sup>. Where, on the death of a depositor, the aggregate value of specified assets<sup>11</sup> exceeds £50,000, the Director of Savings must, before making any payment or transfer of any of the deposits standing to the credit of the depositor either alone or jointly, require the production of a statement from the Commissioners for Revenue and Customs with regard to payment of inheritance tax<sup>12</sup>.

Before 1 May 1981, a depositor, being a person who had attained the age of 16 years, could nominate any person to receive any sum due to the depositor at his death in respect of deposits; but a nomination made after 30 April 1981 is of no effect<sup>13</sup>.

At the request of the depositor, investments may be made out of the deposit in government stock<sup>14</sup>.

Restrictions are imposed on the disclosure of depositors' names and of amounts deposited or withdrawn<sup>15</sup>.

Where a first or any other deposit is made or received in error, the Director of Savings may return the same and cancel all proceedings taken in respect of it, or may take such other steps as may be necessary to give effect to the intention of the parties<sup>16</sup>.

1 See the National Savings Bank Act 1971 ss 2(1), 8; and PARA 810. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING

(i) Relation of Banker and Customer

815. Meanings of 'bank' and 'banker'.

It is the existence of enactments, instruments, agreements, rules, usages and practices which apply to a person by virtue of his being a bank or banker that makes relevant the meanings of the terms 'bank' and 'banker'<sup>1</sup>.

The principal enactments which apply to a person by virtue of his being a bank or banker are the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 and the Cheques Act 1957<sup>2</sup>. Both statutes refer exclusively to 'banker'<sup>3</sup> rather than 'bank'<sup>4</sup>.

The characteristics usually found in bankers are: (1) that they accept money from, and collect cheques for, their customers and place them to their credit; (2) that they honour cheques or orders drawn on them by their customers when presented for payment and debit their customers accordingly; and (3) that they keep current accounts in their books in which the credits and debits are entered<sup>5</sup>. This statement of the essentials of banking business is not, however, exhaustive of all that is ordinary in such business; transactions which lack the above characteristics may nevertheless be usual banking transactions<sup>6</sup>.

The judicial recognition of the banker's lien<sup>7</sup> implies the inclusion in banking business of the making of advances or the granting of overdrafts to customers.

1 See United Dominions Trust Ltd v Kirkwood [1966] 2 QB 431 at 445, [1966] 1 All ER 968 at 974, CA, where Lord Denning MR collected together the statutory privileges then enjoyed by bankers.

2 See PARA 819 et seq. For examples of other statutes which define 'bank' or 'banker' see: (1) the Bank Charter Act 1844 (which provides that the term 'banker' is to extend and apply to all corporations, societies, partnerships, and persons, and every individual person, carrying on the business of banking, whether by the issue of notes or otherwise, except only the Bank of England: see s 28 (amended by the Statute Law Revision Act 1891; and the Statute Law Revision (No 2) Act 1893)); (2) the Agricultural Credits Act 1928 (which provides that 'Bank' means the Bank of England, a person who has permission under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 Pt IV (ss 40-55) (see PARA 348 et seq) to accept deposits, or an EEA firm of the kind mentioned in Sch 3 para 5(b) which has permission under Sch 3 para 15 (as a result of qualifying for authorisation under Sch 3 para 12(1)) to accept deposits or other repayable funds from the public (see PARA 315): see the Agricultural Credits Act 1928 s 5(7) (definition substituted by SI 2001/3649). As to the meaning of 'banking business' see Koh Kim Chai v Asia Commercial Banking Corpn Ltd [1984] 1 WLR 850, PC.

3 In the Bills of Exchange Act 1882, 'banker', unless the context otherwise requires, includes a body of persons whether incorporated or not who carry on the business of banking: s 2. The Cheques Act 1957 contains no definition of 'banker' but is to be construed as one with the Bills of Exchange Act 1882: Cheques Act 1957 s 6(1).

4 See eg the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 ss 60, 73, 74, 79, 80; and the Cheques Act 1957 ss 1-4. As to these provisions see PARAS 1405, 1411, 1519, 1552, 1575.

5 United Dominions Trust Ltd v Kirkwood [1966] 2 QB 431 at 447, [1966] 1 All ER 968 at 975, CA, per Lord Denning MR, where the main question was whether the plaintiff finance house was excluded from the statutory definition of 'moneylenders' by virtue of an exception for 'any person bona fide carrying on the business of banking' (see the Moneylenders Act 1900 s 6(d) (repealed)). See further Re Roe's Legal Charge, Park Street Securities Ltd v Roe [1982] 2 Lloyd's Rep 370, CA.

6 Royal Bank of Canada v IRC [1972] Ch 665 at 679, [1972] 1 All ER 225 at 235 per Megarry J. Numerous other transactions are undertaken at the present day by banks. These include the payment, discounting and collection of bills; money transfers; the issue of letters of credit and performance bonds; the operation of credit and cash card systems; the issue of certificates of deposit and other commercial paper; the custody of valuables; and the issue of travellers' cheques. 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(i) Relation of Banker and Customer/816. Meaning of 'customer'.

816. Meaning of 'customer'.

A customer is someone who has an account with a bank or who is in such relationship with the bank that the relationship of banker and customer exists, even though at this stage he has no account<sup>1</sup>. An occasional or even regular encashment of a cheque is not sufficient to establish the relationship of banker and customer<sup>2</sup>. At the same time, the duration of the relationship is not of the essence<sup>3</sup>. It is usual for banks to make inquiries as to prospective customers to ensure that they are suitable persons with whom to enter into relations; and failure to do so may be a factor in a subsequent claim against the bank for conversion of a cheque collected for the customer's account<sup>4</sup>. The inquiries the bank should make depend upon current banking practice related to the particular circumstances of the case<sup>5</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(i) Relation of Banker and Customer/817. Relation of banker and customer.

817. Relation of banker and customer.

The receipt of money<sup>1</sup> by a banker from or on account of his customer constitutes him the debtor of the customer<sup>2</sup>. The banker is normally liable to repay only the person from whom he received the money<sup>3</sup>. The bank borrows the money and undertakes to repay it or any part of it<sup>4</sup> at the branch of the bank where the account is kept<sup>5</sup>, during banking hours, and upon payment being demanded<sup>6</sup>. Moreover, the bank undertakes to pay any part of the amount due against the written orders of the customer<sup>7</sup>, the relationship here being one of agent and principal, a cheque being the principal's order to his agent to pay the amount of the cheque to the payee<sup>8</sup>. The customer, on his part, undertakes to exercise reasonable care in executing his written orders so as not to mislead the bank or facilitate forgery and, if he becomes aware that forged cheques are being presented, to inform the bank<sup>9</sup>. The contract between banker and customer cannot be unilaterally varied<sup>10</sup>, though there may be terms implied into the contract<sup>11</sup>.

The banker is not a trustee for the customer<sup>12</sup>, who has no right to inquire into, or question the use of, the money by the banker<sup>13</sup>; but the position is otherwise if the banker assumes the office of trustee<sup>14</sup>. Moreover, a banker is affected by the existence of a trust where an account is opened by a customer acting in the capacity of trustee<sup>15</sup>, or where the banker is on notice that a payment into or out of the account is in breach of trust<sup>16</sup>, or where money is paid to a banker for a particular purpose in circumstances such as to impress the payment with a trust<sup>17</sup>.

The receipt of money on deposit account constitutes the banker a debtor to the depositor<sup>18</sup> but not a trustee of the money for him<sup>19</sup>. No new contract is created every time there is a fresh deposit: the account is a continuing one<sup>20</sup>. The debt is repayable either on demand or on conditions agreed with the depositor. Specified notice may be stipulated for, and the return of the deposit book (or receipt) made a condition of repayment, or the deposit may be for a fixed period. If the return of the deposit book is a condition precedent, no actual debt arises until its return<sup>21</sup>. In case of the loss of the book, however, a court would exercise its equitable jurisdiction, and not allow the absence of the receipt to stand in the way of the depositor reclaiming his money<sup>22</sup>. Nor would the court require the depositor to give an indemnity, the deposit book or receipt not being a negotiable instrument<sup>23</sup>. However, for the purpose of satisfying High Court or county court judgments for the payment of money, a sum standing to a person's credit in a deposit account in a bank is deemed to be a sum due or accruing due to that person, and is attachable accordingly<sup>24</sup>.

The receipt of rent by a banker into a customer's account does not make the banker the agent of the owner for the purposes of the Public Health Act 1936<sup>25</sup>.

The banker owes his customer a contractual duty of secrecy<sup>26</sup>. The relation of banker and customer may also give rise to a contractual or tortious duty of care or a fiduciary duty where the banker gives his customer advice<sup>27</sup>; but where the parties are in a contractual relationship, it is not to the advantage of the law's development to search for liability in tort, particularly in a commercial relationship<sup>28</sup>.

The relation of banker and customer is not one which ordinarily gives rise to a presumption of undue influence; in the ordinary course of banking business a banker can explain the nature of a proposed transaction without laying himself open to a charge of undue influence<sup>29</sup>.

The banker has at law a right of lien<sup>30</sup> and a right to combine accounts<sup>31</sup>.

It is unlawful for any person concerned with the provision of banking services and facilities to the public or a section of the public to discriminate against a disabled person in refusing to provide, or deliberately not providing, those services or facilities, or in the standards or terms of those services or facilities<sup>32</sup>. It is also unlawful to discriminate on the grounds of sex, race, colour, ethnic or national origins, religion or belief or sexual orientation<sup>33</sup>.

1     le in so far as the receipt of money on current account consists in the collection of cheques and similar instruments: see PARA 881 et seq (bank as customer's agent for collection).

2     Foley v Hill (1848) 2 HL Cas 28. This rule has been confirmed on numerous occasions: see eg Duggan v Governor of Full Sutton Prison [2004] EWCA Civ 78, [2004] 2 All ER 966. The presentation of a cheque is a demand. The balance on a current account also becomes due when the relationship of banker and customer is ended: see Re Russian Commercial and Industrial Bank [1955] Ch 148, [1955] 1 All ER 75. A credit balance on current account is a liquidated sum of money, and the right of an enemy customer to payment is suspended and not abrogated

14 In general a bank acting as trustee is under like duties to those of any other trustee. Where a trustee, such as a bank trust corporation, holds itself out as having the skill and expertise to carry on the specialised business of trust management, the duty of care of such a trustee is higher than the standard of care of the ordinary prudent man of business (as demanded of a trustee without specialised knowledge): see Bartlett v Barclays Bank Trust Co Ltd [1980] Ch 515, [1980] 1 All ER 139; Bartlett v Barclays Bank Trust Co Ltd (No 2) [1980] Ch 515, [1980] 2 All ER 92. Where a trust corporation fills the double capacity of trustee and banker, its successors in the trust are in no worse position as regards the obtaining of information with respect to the trust bank account than they would have been in if a third party had been the banker, although such a case may justify the drawing of a line between mere banking books or documents, and trust books or documents: see Tiger v Barclays Bank Ltd [1952] 1 All ER 85 at 88, CA, per Jenkins LJ. If the bank is a trustee and places trust money on deposit with itself, the terms of the charging clause in the trust instrument may be such as to exclude the bank from having to account to the beneficiaries for profit from employing the trust money in its business: see Re Waterman's Will Trusts, Lloyds Bank Ltd v Sutton [1952] 2 All ER 1054. ### 817 Relation of banker and customer

NOTE 21--Supreme Court Act 1981 now cited as Senior Courts Act 1981: Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 11 para 1 (in force 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604).

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(i) Relation of Banker and Customer/818. Customers opening accounts.

818. Customers opening accounts.

Anyone may be a customer of a bank<sup>1</sup>. An account may be opened by a married woman<sup>2</sup>, a minor<sup>3</sup>, a trustee, an executor, a local authority, an unincorporated body or a company or corporation formed under the Companies Acts, royal charter or otherwise<sup>4</sup>. None of these customers except the minor is under any contractual disability in this connection<sup>5</sup>. Accounts may be opened for special purposes, as, for instance, in the case of 'wages' accounts intended to preserve a binding banker's priority in a winding up of the company<sup>6</sup>.

819. Married women.

A current account may be opened with a married woman in her own name. Opening it constitutes a binding contract with the married woman who contracts as a feme sole<sup>1</sup>. She has power to draw cheques and give a sufficient discharge<sup>2</sup>; and bona fide dealings with the account cannot subsequently be questioned to the prejudice of the banker<sup>3</sup>.

820. Minors.

A minor is a person who has not reached the age of 18 years<sup>1</sup>. A current account may be opened with a minor so long as it is not allowed to be overdrawn; for a minor may be a creditor<sup>2</sup>. The recoverability of money lent to a minor by way of overdraft is governed by the rules of common law<sup>3</sup>. A bill drawn or indorsed by a minor entitles the holder to receive payment, and to enforce it against any other party to it<sup>4</sup>. A minor cannot reclaim money paid out to him or to others on his cheques<sup>5</sup>. In the case of joint deposit accounts in the name of an adult and a minor, the contract depends upon the terms on which the deposit is made<sup>6</sup>.

Where a guarantee is given in respect of an obligation of a party to a contract made on or after 9 June 1987<sup>7</sup> and the obligation is unenforceable against him, or he repudiates the contract, because he was a minor when the contract was made, the guarantee is not for that reason alone unenforceable against the guarantor<sup>8</sup>.

1 See the Family Law Reform Act 1969 s 1; and CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARA 3.

2 Cf Nottingham Permanent Benefit Building Society v Thurstan [1903] AC 6, HL; and see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARAS 23, 42, 49.

3 The Infants Relief Act 1874 s 1, which rendered 'absolutely void' all contracts entered into by infants for the repayment of money lent or to be lent, was repealed by the Minors' Contracts Act 1987 ss 1(a), 4(2), 5(2) as regards contracts made on or after 9 June 1987. As to the rules of common law see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARA 12. Where a person (the 'claimant') on or after 9 June 1987 enters into a contract with another (the 'defendant') and the contract is unenforceable against the defendant, or he repudiates it, because he was a minor when the contract was made, the court may, if it is just and equitable to do so, require the defendant to transfer to the claimant any property acquired by the defendant under the contract, or any property representing it: ss 3(1), 5(2). This power is without prejudice to any other remedy available to the claimant (s 3(2)), including presumably the remedy of tracing (see PARA 857).

4 Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 22(2). See also PARA 1471.

5 The disability of minority goes no further than is necessary for the protection of the minor: Burnaby v Equitable Reversionary Interest Society (1885) 28 ChD 416 at 424 per Pearson J; Valentini v Canali (1889) 24 QBD 166; Pearce v Brain [1929] 2 KB 310. 8 Minors' Contracts Act 1987 s 2. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(i) Relation of Banker and Customer/821. Persons lacking capacity.

821. Persons lacking capacity.

Where a person is mentally disabled or disordered or lacks capacity and the banker knows of it, he has no mandate on which to act; though if he collects a cheque for the person, it is likely that the banker could claim that he collected for a 'customer'; otherwise any balances and securities the person may have with the bank are tied, to be dealt with on the directions of the Court of Protection or by the depositor if he recovers and again becomes capable of contracting<sup>1</sup>. Money lent by a bank to meet necessities for such a person's household and estate may be recovered by right of subrogation; but claims for interest and charges do not lie<sup>2</sup>.

2 See Re Beavan, Davies, Banks & Co v Beavan [1912] 1 Ch 196; B Liggett (Liverpool) Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1928] 1 KB 48; Scarth v National Provincial Bank Ltd (1930) 4 LDAB 241.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(i) Relation of Banker and Customer/822. Companies and corporations.

822. Companies and corporations.

In the absence of an express power, companies and corporations, whether trading or non-trading, ordinarily have implied power to open current and deposit accounts and to draw valid cheques and make withdrawals<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> See Serrell v Derbyshire, Staffordshire and Worcestershire Junction Rly Co (1850) 9 CB 811 at 820 (where it was conceded that the directors had implied power to draw cheques for the lawful purposes of the company); Bateman v Mid-Wales Rly Co (1866) LR 1 CP 499 at 506 (distinguishing cheques from bills). As to the capacity of corporations to incur liability on negotiable instruments see PARA 1466.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(i) Relation of Banker and Customer/823. Joint accounts.

823. Joint accounts.

Unless the contract otherwise provides, a sum standing to the credit of a joint account is a debt owed to the creditors jointly and is not enforceable by either on his own<sup>1</sup>. Where the mandate provides for both account holders to sign, the bank impliedly undertakes to each of them severally not to honour orders for payment without his or her signature<sup>2</sup>. A claim for breach of such an undertaking may be brought without joining the other account holder, and the measure of damages is prima facie equal to the value of the claimant's interest in the moneys wrongfully paid away<sup>3</sup>.

Where a person deposits money with a bank in the names of himself and another with instructions that it is to be payable to either person or the survivor, the other's right at common law against the bank depends on whether the depositor purported to make the other a party to the contract; if the depositor did so, then he must have had authority to act as the other's agent. If there was no such authority, the bank would not be under obligation to the other party unless the latter ratified the contract<sup>4</sup>.

If on the death of either party the current account is overdrawn, the survivor will be liable for the whole debt. Where the money is in the name of husband and wife, the position on the husband's death may depend upon the reason for setting up the joint account<sup>5</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> Catlin v Cyprus Finance Corp'n (London) Ltd (Catlin, third party) [1983] QB 759, [1983] 1 All ER 809, following Jackson v White and Midland Bank Ltd [1967] 2 Lloyd's Rep 68 (where it was held that, by the mandate, the bank had made an agreement with both customers jointly that it would honour cheques signed by them jointly, and also separate agreements with each of them severally that it would not honour any cheques unless the customer had signed, so that, having honoured cheques not signed by the plaintiff but forged by the other customer, the bank was liable to the plaintiff for breach of the separate agreement). Cf Brewer v Westminster Bank Ltd [1952] 2 All ER 650 (where two executors opened a joint bank account and the mandate authorised the bank to honour any drawings on the account signed by both executors, and one executor forged the other's signature; it was held that the executors' right to have cheques honoured by the bank only if signed by both of them was a right owed to them jointly, and it could only be enforced in an action brought either by both executors joining as plaintiffs or by one as plaintiff joining the other as defendant (this being merely a procedural matter), neither of which was possible because several persons cannot sue at law jointly unless each one is in a position to sue). See further PARA 849.

3 Twibell v London Suburban Bank [1869] WN 127; Catlin v Cyprus Finance Corp'n (London) Ltd (Catlin, third party) [1983] QB 759, [1983] 1 All ER 809, not following Brewer v Westminster Bank Ltd [1952] 2 All ER 650.

4 See McEvoy v Belfast Banking Co Ltd [1935] AC 24, HL, in relation to joint deposits with a minor. A joint account holder is not prevented from succeeding to the joint account by survivorship on the ground that he has not contributed to the account where it is established that the deceased, the other account holder, intended that he should so succeed: Aroso v Coutts & Co [2002] 1 All ER (Comm) 241. The other named account holder may be able to invoke the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999 s 1(1)(b), which permits a third party to enforce a term of a contract if the term purports to confer a benefit on him, but not if on a true construction of the contract it appears that the parties did not intend the term to be enforceable by the third party (see s 1(2)). See CONTRACT.

5 Where the customers are husband and wife and the latter survives the former, the rule permitting the survivor to draw any balance standing to a joint account may not apply. The position depends on whether the wife was joined in the account as a matter of convenience or whether the husband intended to provide for her in the event of his death: see Husband v Davis (1851) 10 CB 645; Re Williams, Williams v Davies (1864) 3 Sw & Tr 437; Marshall v Crutwell (1875) LR 20 Eq 328; Hall v Hall [1911] 1 Ch 487; Re Bishop, National Provincial Bank Ltd v Bishop [1965] Ch 450, [1965] 1 All ER 249. In the case of a joint account between a husband and wife no restriction is implied into a mandate unless there is an express provision which limits a bank's freedom to honour a cheque drawn by one account-holder without reference to the other: Fielding v Royal Bank of Scotland plc [2004] EWCA Civ 64, [2004] All ER (D) 183 (Feb).

824. Trust accounts.

A trust account is an account opened by a customer acting as a trustee or fiduciary and designated as a trust account or in some other way to indicate its fiduciary nature<sup>1</sup>. The ordinary relation between a banker and a customer acting as trustee or fiduciary is that of debtor and creditor<sup>2</sup>. Strictly speaking, it is inaccurate to refer to the credit balance on a trust account as 'trust moneys'. Money so paid into a bank ceases altogether to be money of the customer, the subject matter of the trust being the right to repayment. The designation of an account as a trust account or in some equivalent way fixes the banker with notice of the existence of a trust, which limits the banker's right to combine accounts<sup>3</sup> and establishes a necessary element in any claim to render the banker liable as constructive trustee<sup>4</sup>.

1 For an example of an account headed in some other way see Re Gross, ex p Adair (1871) 24 LT 198; affd sub nom Re Gross, ex p Kingston (1871) 6 Ch App 632, where an account heading 'Police Account' was held to be as clear and distinct a statement that the moneys paid into it were trust moneys belonging to the county, as if the moneys had been put into a strong box labelled 'County Moneys'.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(i) Relation of Banker and Customer/825. Money paid for a special purpose.

825. Money paid for a special purpose.

The legal relation of debtor and creditor does not exclude the implication of a trust enforceable in equity, there being no difficulty in recognising the co-existence in one transaction of legal and equitable rights and remedies<sup>1</sup>.

An arrangement for the payment of a person's creditors by a third party may give rise to a relationship of a fiduciary character or trust in favour, as a primary trust, of the creditors, and secondarily, if the primary trust fails, of the third party<sup>2</sup>. The lender acquires an equitable right to see that the payment is applied for the primary designated purpose, and when this purpose has been carried out, the lender has his remedy against the borrower in debt; if the primary purpose cannot be carried out and a secondary purpose has been agreed, expressly or by implication, the remedies of equity may be invoked to give effect to it<sup>3</sup>.

Where the debtor is a customer of the bank and the bank receives such a payment in circumstances where it is on notice that the arrangement includes a secondary trust, the bank may not, if the primary purpose fails, apply the payment to discharge a debt owed to it by the debtor<sup>4</sup>; and the money so paid will not form part of the debtor's assets so as to fall within the assets charged to the bank under a floating charge<sup>5</sup>.

826. Solicitors' client and trust accounts.

With the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, the Council of the Law Society<sup>1</sup> must make rules:

- 1 (1) as to the opening and keeping by solicitors of accounts at banks<sup>2</sup> or with building societies for clients' money;

- 2 (2) as to the keeping by solicitors of accounts containing particulars and information as to money received or held or paid by them for or on behalf of their clients; and
- 3 (3) empowering the Council to take such action as may be necessary to enable it to ascertain whether or not the rules are being complied with,

and the rules may specify the location of the branches at which the accounts are to be kept<sup>1</sup>.

With the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, the Council must also make rules:

- 4 (a) as to the opening and keeping by solicitors of accounts at banks or with building societies for money comprised in controlled trusts<sup>2</sup>;
- 5 (b) as to the keeping by solicitors of accounts containing particulars and information as to money received or held or paid by them for or on account of any such trust; and
- 6 (c) empowering the Council to take such action as may be necessary to enable it to ascertain whether or not the rules are being complied with,

and the rules may specify the location of the branches at which the accounts are to be kept<sup>3</sup>.

The rules must make provision for requiring a solicitor, in such cases as may be prescribed by the rules, either:

- 7 (i) to keep on deposit in a separate account at a bank or with a building society for the benefit of the client money received for or on account of a client; or
- 8 (ii) to make good to the client out of the solicitor's own money a sum equivalent to the interest which would have accrued if the money so received had been so kept on deposit<sup>4</sup>.

Where a solicitor keeps an account with a bank or a building society, the bank or society does not incur any liability, nor is it under any obligation to make any inquiry, nor is it deemed to have any knowledge of any right of any person to any money paid or credited to the account, which it would not incur or be under or be deemed to have in the case of an account kept by a person entitled absolutely to all the money paid or credited to it; and the bank or society does not have any recourse or right against money standing to the credit of the account, in respect of any liability of the solicitor to the bank or society, other than a liability in connection with the account<sup>5</sup>. The purpose of the provisions of head (i) above is not to give the bank a special advantage but to ensure that it suffers no special disadvantage; their purpose is not to put a solicitor's client account in some special category in which constructive trusteeship can never arise<sup>6</sup>.

Money paid into a client account is a debt owing from the banker to the solicitor<sup>7</sup>; but it may also be, in effect, trust money to the banker's knowledge<sup>10</sup>. It will be attached by a third party debt order served on the bank<sup>11</sup>.

2 Except where the context otherwise so requires, 'bank' means the Bank of England, a person (other than a building society) who has permission under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 Pt IV (ss 40-55) (see PARA 348 et seq) to accept deposits, or an EEA firm of the kind mentioned in Sch 3 para 5(b) which has permission under Sch 3 para 15 (as a result of qualifying for authorisation under Sch 3 para 12) to accept deposits (see PARA 315); Solicitors Act 1974 s 87(1) (definition substituted by SI 2001/3649). A body comprised in the new TSB group (see PARA 809 note 3) is a bank for the purposes of the Solicitors Act 1974: Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 s 3(9), Sch 1 para 11(2)(b).

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(i) Relation of Banker and Customer/827. Dispositions by customer.

827. Dispositions by customer.

Money on current account is subject to many of the legal incidents of a debt. It passes under a bequest by the customer of 'money owing to me at the time of my decease'<sup>1</sup>, though it equally falls within a bequest of 'ready money'<sup>2</sup>. It is payable to the legal representatives of a deceased customer on production of probate or letters of administration<sup>3</sup>. It is repayable on demand, the drawing of a cheque not being a condition precedent<sup>4</sup>. It may be legally assigned<sup>5</sup>, but probably only as a whole, by a single assignment<sup>6</sup>. In England a cheque is not an assignment<sup>7</sup>.

On the bankruptcy of the customer, any balance to his credit vests in his trustee in bankruptcy<sup>8</sup>, and the banker may be summarily compelled to pay it over<sup>9</sup>. Where, whether before or after the service of written notice by the trustee claiming for the bankrupt's estate any property which has been acquired by, or has devolved upon, a bankrupt since the commencement of the bankruptcy<sup>10</sup>, a banker enters into a transaction in good faith and without notice of the bankruptcy, the trustee is not in respect of that transaction entitled<sup>11</sup> to any remedy against that banker, or any person whose title to any property derives from him<sup>12</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(i) Relation of Banker and Customer/828. Customer's title to money paid in.

828. Customer's title to money paid in.

A banker is not entitled to refuse his customer's demand for repayment on grounds of mere suspicion or curiosity<sup>1</sup>. Similarly, where a banker takes money from his customer in discharge of a debt, he is not bound to inquire into the manner in which the person so paying the debt acquired the money with which he pays it<sup>2</sup>.

A banker is, however, not only entitled but bound to refuse payment if he has, or a reasonable banker would have, grounds for believing that the authorised signatories on an account are misusing their authority for the purpose of defrauding their principal or otherwise defeating his true intentions<sup>3</sup>; or if he is on notice that the payment is in breach of trust<sup>4</sup>.

Where the customer's title to money or cheques paid into the account is defective, the banker may become exposed to a tracing claim<sup>5</sup>, a claim in conversion, or a claim for money had and received<sup>6</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(i) Relation of Banker and Customer/829. Customer's duty in operating current account.

829. Customer's duty in operating current account.

In operating his current account the customer owes to his bank two duties of care: (1) to refrain from drawing a cheque in such a manner as to facilitate fraud or forgery<sup>1</sup>; and (2) to inform the bank of any forgery of a cheque purportedly drawn on the account as soon as he, the customer, becomes aware of it<sup>2</sup>.

The customer does not owe any wider duty of care in the operation of his current account; and in particular he does not owe a duty of care: (a) to take reasonable precautions in the management of his business with the bank to prevent forged cheques being presented to it; or (b) to take such steps to check his periodic bank statements as a reasonable customer in his position would take to enable him to notify the bank of any debit items in the account which he has not authorised<sup>3</sup>.

Mere silence, without resulting injury to the banker, does not operate as an estoppel or constitute adoption<sup>4</sup>.

The alteration in the position of the banker necessary to support adoption is not confined to payment of the cheque. Loss of opportunity of protecting himself against subsequent forgeries, if any, by the same person, and loss of the chance of taking proceedings, civil or criminal, against the forger, as by his escaping out of the jurisdiction, constitute sufficient alteration in the position of, and prejudice to, the banker<sup>5</sup>. It appears immaterial whether civil proceedings against the forger would have resulted in recovering any money or not<sup>6</sup>.

Where this principle of adoption applies, it covers all previous forgeries by the same person if, notified on the last occasion when the customer or other person had knowledge of the forgery, the bank might have taken steps to recover from the forger all money previously obtained by him<sup>7</sup>.

While the customer should not, for example, sign a blank cheque leaving the amount in words to be filled in by a clerk (see London Joint Stock Bank Ltd v Macmillan and Arthur above), there is no duty to fill in a blank between the name of the payee and 'or order' (see Slingsby v District Bank Ltd [1932] 1 KB 544, CA).

In William Ewing & Co v Dominion Bank (1904) 24 SCR 133, the Supreme Court of Canada by a majority expressly extended the doctrine to the case of a businessman, not a customer, on the ground of moral and commercial obligation. ### 830. Closing of account.

A banker is not entitled arbitrarily to close a current account in credit<sup>1</sup>. He must give the customer reasonable notice<sup>2</sup> and make satisfactory provision for outstanding cheques.

A customer's instruction to his bank to close his account and transfer the balance to a third party does not end the relationship of banker and customer<sup>3</sup>, the instructions being revocable until the transferee is notified of the transfer<sup>4</sup>.

831. Money laundering.

Regulations have been made in order to prevent the use of the financial system for the purposes of money laundering and terrorist financing<sup>1</sup>. Relevant persons<sup>2</sup> must, when undertaking certain activities in the course of business, apply customer due diligence measures<sup>3</sup> where they establish a business relationship, carry out an occasional transaction, suspect money laundering or terrorist finance or doubt the accuracy of customer identification information<sup>4</sup>. Relevant persons also have to undertake ongoing monitoring of their business relationships<sup>5</sup>. There is a general rule on the timing of the verification of the customer's identity subject to certain exceptions<sup>6</sup>. The regulations have specific measures on record-keeping, procedures and training<sup>7</sup>; and also provisions on supervision and registration<sup>8</sup>. There are enforcement powers<sup>9</sup> for certain supervisors, including powers to obtain information and enter and inspect premises<sup>10</sup>. Civil penalties may be imposed by these supervisors on persons who fail to comply with the regulations' requirements<sup>11</sup>. Miscellaneous matters<sup>12</sup> include provision for the recovery of penalties and charges through the court<sup>13</sup>, the imposition of an obligation on certain public authorities to report suspicions of money laundering or terrorist financing<sup>14</sup> and transitional provisions<sup>15</sup>.

The Financial Services Authority<sup>16</sup> has as one of its objectives the reduction of financial crime<sup>17</sup> and the Authority may make rules in relation to the prevention and detection of money laundering<sup>18</sup>.

There are also statutory provisions penalising those who assist in the retention of the proceeds of drug trafficking or criminal conduct and requiring banks and their employees to report suspicions or beliefs of money laundering to the police<sup>19</sup>. Anti-terrorism legislation has been enacted to prevent the retention or control of terrorist property, including money<sup>20</sup>.

1 See the Money Laundering Regulations 2007, SI 2007/2157; and PARA 539 et seq. The Regulations revoke and replace earlier regulations (the Money Laundering Regulations 2003, SI 2003/3075) and implement in part European Parliament and EC Council Directive 2005/60 (OJ L309, 25.11.2005, p 15) on the prevention of the use of the financial system for the purpose of money laundering and terrorist financing. As to the commencement of the Money Laundering Regulations 2007, SI 2007/2157, see reg 1 which provides that the regulations are in force from 15 December 2007.

As to the action to be taken where an investigation into money laundering creates conflicts between the public interest in combating crime and the entitlement of a private body to obtain redress from the courts see Bank of Scotland v A Ltd [2001] EWCA Civ 52, [2001] 3 All ER 58, [2001] 1 All ER (Comm) 1023, [2001] 1 All ER (Comm) 1023; Amalgamated Metal Trading Ltd v City of London Police Financial Investigation Unit [2003] EWHC 703 (Comm), [2003] 4 All ER 1225, [2003] 1 All ER (Comm) 900; Squirrel Ltd v National Westminster Bank plc [2005] EWHC 664 (Ch), [2005] 2 All ER 784, [2005] 1 All ER (Comm) 749. 2 See the Money Laundering Regulations 2007, SI 2007/2157, reg 3 and as to exclusions see reg 4 (see PARA 540). 'Relevant persons' include credit institutions (including most banks and branches), financial institutions, auditors, accountants, tax advisers and insolvency practitioners, independent legal professionals, trust or company service providers, estate agents, high value dealers and casinos.

3 See the Money Laundering Regulations 2007, SI 2007/2157, reg 5; and PARA 542. As to customer due diligence see Pt 2 (regs 5-18). The measures consist of identifying and verifying the identity of the customer and any beneficial owner (see reg 6; and PARA 542) of the customer, and obtaining information on the purpose and intended nature of the business relationship.

Aspects of customer due diligence include a general rule on the timing of the verification of the customer's identity (part of which relates specifically to banks) with certain exceptions (see reg 9; and PARA 543); and when casinos must identify and verify their customers (see reg 10; and PARA 544). Failure to apply such measures means that a person cannot establish or continue a business relationship with the customer concerned or undertake an occasional transaction: see reg 11; and PARA 545 (and see also reg 12; and PARA 542 as to an exception from the requirement to identify the beneficial owner for debt issues held in trust). Relevant persons may apply simplified customer due diligence measures for certain products, customers or transactions (listed in reg 13: see PARA 542) and must apply enhanced measures in four situations (one of which relates specifically to banking): see reg 14; and PARA 546. There are obligations on relevant persons in respect of their overseas branches and subsidiaries: see reg 15; and PARA 547. There are also specific obligations in respect of shell banks and anonymous accounts: see reg 16; and PARA 548. The regulations provide a list of persons on whom relevant persons can rely to perform customer due diligence measures: see reg 17; and PARA 549.

As to the duties of supervisors see reg 24; and PARA 553. Money service businesses, high value dealers and trust or company service providers which are not otherwise registered are subject to a system of mandatory registration: see regs 25-30; and PARA 555. Money service businesses and trust or company service providers must not be registered unless the business, its owners, its nominated officer and senior managers are fit and proper persons: see reg 28; and PARA 555. Other sectors are only required to register if the supervisor decides to maintain a register: see regs 33, 34; and PARA 557. Supervisors are able to impose charges on persons they supervise: see reg 35; and PARA 558.

11 See the Money Laundering Regulations 2007, SI 2007/2157, reg 42; and PARA 563. The requirements are those under Pts 2, 3 and 4. Provision is made for reviews of and appeals against such penalties: see regs 43, 44; and PARA 564. Relevant persons who fail to comply with the requirements of Pts 2, 3 and 4 are also guilty of a criminal offence (see regs 45-47; and PARAS 565, 566) although persons convicted of a criminal offence may not also be liable to a civil penalty.

(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker

832. Paying banker.

A banker is bound to pay cheques drawn on him by a customer in legal form provided he has in his hands at the time sufficient and available funds for the purpose<sup>1</sup>, or provided the cheques are within the limits of an agreed overdraft<sup>2</sup>, and may so pay them within a reasonable period after the bank's advertised closing time<sup>3</sup>. Where he pays in accordance with specific statutory provisions, he may claim protection against claims of the true owner<sup>4</sup>. He must either pay cheques or refuse payment at once; a request to re-present amounts to dishonour<sup>5</sup>. A banker must not continue to pay cheques without inquiry if a reasonable and honest banker with knowledge of the relevant facts would have considered that there was a serious or real possibility, albeit not amounting to a probability, that the customer was being defrauded or that moneys were being misappropriated<sup>6</sup>. Failure to inquire is not excused merely because of a conviction that the answer would be false<sup>7</sup>.

Post-dated cheques are not invalid<sup>8</sup>, but the banker should not pay such a cheque if presented before the date it bears<sup>9</sup>. If, therefore, a cheque dated on a Sunday is presented on the previous business day, it should be returned with the answer 'post-dated'<sup>10</sup>. A post-dated cheque, however, if presented at or after its ostensible date, should be paid though the banker knows it to be post-dated, and even if it has been presented before the date and refused payment<sup>11</sup>. A cheque is not payable on a non-business day<sup>12</sup>.

The Treasury has power, by order made by statutory instrument, to suspend financial dealings in the national interest for such time as may be specified in the order<sup>13</sup>. An obligation on a person to do a thing on a day on which he is prevented from doing it by such an order, or is unable to do it by reason of such an order, is deemed to be complied with if he does it as soon as practicable thereafter<sup>14</sup>.

A banker is justified in refusing payment of a cheque which is ambiguous in form<sup>15</sup>. He may be liable if he pays a cheque which is irregularly indorsed<sup>16</sup> in circumstances in which the absence of, or irregularity in, indorsement is not covered by statute<sup>17</sup>.

Bankers habitually refuse payment of what are called stale cheques, that is, cheques which have been outstanding for a period varying from 6 months in some banks to 12 months in others; but the practice has never received judicial sanction<sup>18</sup>.

Bankers usually refuse payment of an undated cheque, or one on which the date is incomplete, and it has been held that a banker is not bound to honour an undated cheque<sup>19</sup>. The date is a material particular, and the prima facie authority<sup>20</sup> of the person in possession to fill in the date must be exercised within a reasonable time<sup>21</sup>. Any alteration of the date of a cheque appears to be a material alteration<sup>22</sup>, and a banker should therefore refuse to pay a cheque on which the date appears to have been altered.

It is submitted that a banker should not pay a cheque to a payee he knows to be an undischarged bankrupt<sup>23</sup>. The validity of payment to a payee who is a minor has never been questioned<sup>24</sup>.

11 In Emanuel v Robarts (1868) 9 B & S 121, the bankers were held justified under a custom of London bankers in refusing payment of a post-dated cheque so re-presented. The ground of decision was the then existing doubt as to the legality of post-dated cheques; that legality is now established (see the text and note 8) and the custom could not obtain at the present day.

Consenting or conniving directors or officers of bodies corporate, or members of a body corporate managed by its members, have a personal criminal liability: see the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971 s 2(5). 17 Protection is given to bankers paying undorsed or irregularly indorsed cheques and certain other instruments not technically bills of exchange by the Cheques Act 1957 s 1: see PARA 836; and PARA 1552. Before the Cheques Act 1957, paying bankers required indorsement of order cheques for their own protection, since a banker would have had no defence had he paid an order cheque which was undorsed or irregularly indorsed to a person who had no title to it: cf PARA 836. The regularity of the indorsement depended upon mercantile custom, and books on practical banking contained pages of examples. Little attention was paid to the question of whether the indorsement, which was, generally speaking, in blank, was made or not made animo indorsandi or was merely a receipt. As to statutory provisions protecting paying bankers see also the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 ss 60, 80; and PARAS 836, 838. An irregular indorsement may yet be sufficient to pass title: see Arab Bank Ltd v Ross [1952] 2 QB 216 at 226, [1952] 1 All ER 709 at 715, CA, per Denning LJ.

18 Save in case of damage by non-presentation within a reasonable time, the drawer remains liable until discharged by lapse of time: Robinson v Hawksford (1846) 9 QB 52; Laws v Rand (1857) 3 CBNS 442; King and Boyd v Porter [1925] NI 107, CA. See LIMITATION PERIODS vol 68 (2008) PARA 963. In the notes to Serle v Norton (1841) 2 Mood & R 401, it is suggested that the practice is justified by the custom of bankers. In any event, the customer's credit would not be damaged by the cheque being returned marked with this ground of refusal.

23 It is the banker's duty, as far as possible, to obtain a good discharge for his customer. This prima facie the bankrupt cannot give, his estate having vested in the trustee: see the Insolvency Act 1986 ss 283(1), 306, 385(1); and BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARA 216. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/833. Authority to draw as condition of payment.

833. Authority to draw as condition of payment.

The cheque must be drawn by a person having authority express or implied<sup>1</sup>. A per pro signature puts the banker on inquiry as to the authority of the person so signing<sup>2</sup>. Where the account is not that of an individual, it is customary to take a mandate setting out the parties authorised to draw and the form in which they are to sign; the mandate must be strictly observed.

Apart from agreement<sup>3</sup>, cheques on ordinary joint accounts should be drawn by all the parties in whose name the account stands<sup>4</sup>. However, the banker is justified, in case of death, in allowing the survivor to draw any balance standing to the joint account, except, as in the case of husband and wife, when the object with which the account was opened requires refusal<sup>5</sup>.

During partnership, and in the absence of instructions to the contrary<sup>6</sup>, any partner has the right to draw on the partnership account in the firm name<sup>7</sup>. The death of one or more partners does not absolutely preclude the surviving partner or partners from drawing on the firm account<sup>8</sup>, but the modern and preferable method is that, where to the knowledge of the banker a partner dies, the old account should be operated only for the purpose of winding up the partnership, and arrangements should be made for a new account, carrying over to it any balance remaining<sup>9</sup>. In the absence of agreement to the contrary, the bankruptcy of one partner involves the dissolution of the firm<sup>10</sup>; but this does not prevent the other partner or partners from drawing on the firm account for purposes of the partnership.

An account of a deceased person cannot be drawn upon or the money transferred until probate or letters of administration have been granted and registered with the banker. In the absence of special arrangement, one of several executors or administrators may draw on an account opened with the deceased, or with them as executors or administrators<sup>11</sup>. Trustees cannot delegate the drawing of cheques to one of their number, but a trustee may, by power of attorney, delegate this power for up to 12 months; the statutory power of delegation is strictly construed<sup>12</sup>.

- 1 Theoretically a cheque need not be drawn by a customer. Cf Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240, HL, where protection was awarded under the Stamp Act 1853 s 19 to bankers' drafts, as being 'drawn upon a banker', which words are similar to those in the definition of a cheque contained in the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 73 (see further PARA 848). However, a banker is under no obligation to pay a cheque drawn by someone other than a customer, though he may place himself under such an obligation, as in the case of a demand draft drawn on him by a beneficiary under a letter of credit.
- 2 Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 25. See also PARA 1474. For example, an executor cannot as a rule delegate his powers, though one of several executors may sign for all, and a cheque signed per pro an executor ought not to be paid without inquiry and satisfactory explanation. As to per pro indorsements see PARA 892.
- 3 See eg Marshall v Crutwell (1875) LR 20 Eq 328.
- 4 Husband v Davis (1851) 10 CB 645 at 650 per Maule J; and cf Brandon v Scott (1857) 7 E & B 234. As to the determination by one of the joint customers of the authority to pay see PARA 847. The common form of bank mandate relating to joint accounts embodies the authority of the signatories to the bank to honour cheques drawn by either or both, as the case may be, or the survivor. It may in addition give similar authority in respect of bills of exchange, the withdrawal of securities and property held for safe custody, the taking of advances, and the pledging and deposit of securities for advances. The effect of such a mandate is usually considered to be no more than an indication of the intention of the parties, because the mandate becomes ineffective on the death of either party, though it does not affect the rule of survivorship where this would otherwise apply: see Husband v Davis (1851) 10 CB 645; Williams v Davies (1864) 3 Sw & Tr 437; Marshall v Crutwell (1875) LR 20 Eq 328. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/834. Funds to be available.

834. Funds to be available.

There must be sufficient funds to cover the whole amount of the cheque presented, for, in the absence of special arrangement, there is no obligation on the banker to pay any part of a cheque for an amount exceeding the available balance<sup>1</sup>. A cheque is not an assignment of funds in the banker's hands<sup>2</sup>.

Cheques must be paid in the order in which they are presented, whether by post or otherwise<sup>3</sup>. If two cheques are presented simultaneously, for example through the same clearing, and there are funds sufficient to pay only one, it is doubtful whether both may be returned<sup>4</sup>.

The funds must be not only sufficient, but available. Even in the case of notes, the banker is entitled to reasonable time between the paying in and drawing against in which to carry out the necessary book-keeping entries<sup>5</sup>. In the case of cheques and other documents, he is entitled to a reasonable time for clearing or collection according to their respective nature<sup>6</sup>.

Mere crediting as cash is not sufficient to entitle the customer to draw against the cheque before clearing. There must be an agreement, express or implied, to permit the customer to draw<sup>7</sup>.

Where a bank is required by a client's standing order to pay a sum on a particular day of each month to a payee until further order, and there are insufficient funds in the client's account on the material date to satisfy the standing order, the bank is under no duty to review the account to meet the order as and when sufficient funds become available<sup>8</sup>.

1 The banker contracts with the customer to honour cheques only when he has 'sufficient' funds in hand: see Carew v Duckworth (1869) LR 4 Exch 313; Joachimson v Swiss Bank Corp [1921] 3 KB 110 at 127, CA, per Atkin LJ.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/835. When funds not available.

835. When funds not available.

A balance at one branch of a bank does not entitle a customer to draw on another branch where he has no account or is overdrawn<sup>1</sup>, for different branches of a bank are for this purpose separate entities, though the bank may apply funds which it holds at one branch to meet an overdraft of the customer at another<sup>2</sup>. If the customer has, in the same capacity, accounts at two or more branches, the bank is entitled to combine them, in the absence of agreement or course of business suggesting otherwise, and to treat the ultimate credit balance, if any, as alone available for drawing purposes<sup>3</sup>.

A third party debt order founded on a judgment against the customer and served on the banker prevents any credit balance being available irrespective of the relative amounts of the judgment and the balance<sup>4</sup>, unless the order requires the attachment of the balance up to a stated sum only.

The fact that bills discounted for the customer are not yet due does not render a credit balance on current account not available<sup>5</sup>.

If a banker has marked cheques<sup>6</sup> at the instance of the customer, he is entitled to retain funds to meet them. Where he does so at the instance of another banker, for clearing purposes, he binds himself to pay. While marking does not make the banker an acceptor, it may amount to a representation by him that the cheque will be paid if presented within a reasonable time<sup>7</sup>.

The presentation of a bankruptcy petition against a customer, and the making of a bankruptcy order, render money standing to his credit not available<sup>8</sup>; the same consequence flows from the presentation of a petition for the winding up of a corporate customer<sup>9</sup>.

Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/836. Payment of order cheques in good faith in ordinary course of business.

836. Payment of order cheques in good faith in ordinary course of business.

A banker who in good faith and in the ordinary course of business pays a cheque<sup>1</sup> payable to order<sup>2</sup> drawn on him, to which the person in possession has no title by reason of the indorsement being forged, is protected from liability, and may debit his customer with the amount so paid<sup>3</sup>. A banker who in good faith and in the ordinary course of business pays a cheque drawn on him which is not indorsed or is irregularly indorsed does not incur any liability by reason only of the absence of, or irregularity in, indorsement<sup>4</sup>. A thing is done in good faith if it is done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not<sup>5</sup>.

Apart from the statutory provisions relating to crossed cheques<sup>6</sup>, payment contrary to the crossing would not be in the ordinary course of business<sup>7</sup>. Omission to ascertain that the ostensible indorsement was in proper form, for example, where one indorsement is 'placed to account of payee', would, prior to the passing of the Cheques Act 1957, have been a departure from the ordinary course of business<sup>8</sup>; but now a payment may be in good faith and in the ordinary course of business notwithstanding that the instrument bears no indorsement or an irregular indorsement and the banker will be deemed to have paid in due course<sup>9</sup>. Payment over the counter of a cheque for a large amount to a suspicious-looking person might be a departure from the ordinary course of business<sup>10</sup>.

Payment need not be in actual cash to the person presenting<sup>11</sup>. The banker's obligation to pay is during business hours<sup>12</sup>, but he is entitled to make a payment outside the usual banking hours and such payment seems to be within the ordinary course of business<sup>13</sup>.

1 It is of the nature of a cheque that it is payable on demand: see the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 73. See also PARAS 1405, 1410.

2 As to the meaning of 'order cheque', or cheque payable to order, see PARA 879. A cheque payable to order is negotiated by the indorsement of the holder and completed by delivery: Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 31(3). See also PARA 1489. Indorsement of cheques is now largely a matter of theory since printed forms carrying the words 'account payee' or 'a/c payee' are no longer transferable and are only valid between the parties: see s 81A; and PARAS 895, 1500.

3 Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60. See also PARA 1552. It is not incumbent on the banker to show that the indorsement of the payee or any subsequent indorsement was made by or under the authority of the person whose indorsement it purports to be, and the banker is deemed to have paid the bill in due course, although such indorsement has been forged or made without authority: s 60. Section 60 does not apply to drafts between branch and head office (see PARA 896) or to documents payment of which is made conditional on the signature of an annexed receipt or on presentation within a limited time (see PARA 898). Payment in the ordinary course of business includes payment of order cheques not indorsed or irregularly indorsed: see the Cheques Act 1957 s 1(1); and the text to note 4.

If the banker is both paying and collecting banker, he must also show himself not to have been negligent within s 4 (see PARA 882): Carpenters' Co v British Mutual Banking Co [1938] 1 KB 511, [1937] 3 All ER 811, CA (decided in relation to negligence within the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 82 (repealed)). 8 In Slingsby v District Bank Ltd [1931] 2 KB 588 (affd [1932] 1 KB 544, CA), the court held that the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60 afforded no protection as the cheque, having been altered, was defective, apart from the indorsement.

11 'Payment' within the meaning of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 is broadly interpreted: see Glasscock v Balls (1889) 24 QBD 13 at 16, CA, per Lord Esher MR. A cheque drawn on one branch of a bank, paid in at another, and appearing as an item in balancing accounts between the branches, has been held to be paid: Bissell & Co v Fox Bros & Co (1885) 53 LT 193, CA; Capital and Counties Bank v Gordon [1903] AC 240, HL. Where payment was made by the paying banker by cheque, this was held to be payment within the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 79(2) (see PARA 839): see Meyer & Co Ltd v Sze Hai Tong Banking and Insurance Co Ltd [1913] AC 847, PC.

Many banks have automatic teller machines installed which dispense cash. Most systems involve the issue by the bank to its customer of a plastic card which is inserted into the machine to withdraw cash. Unless the system is directly linked to the bank's central computer account files so that the customer's account is debited immediately the withdrawal is made, the card is probably a credit token within the meaning of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s 14 (see CONSUMER CREDIT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 88). Automatic teller machines are capable of performing most other functions of a cashier (eg accepting deposits, giving the balance of a customer's account, and transferring funds). See further PARA 906.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/837. Payment of bearer cheques in good faith and without negligence.

837. Payment of bearer cheques in good faith and without negligence.

A banker who in good faith and without negligence<sup>1</sup> pays a bearer cheque<sup>2</sup> on presentation is free from all liability<sup>3</sup>, and may debit his customer<sup>4</sup>, though the holder had no title or a defective title to the cheque<sup>5</sup>. If the cheque has reached the payee actually or constructively, payment in due course by the banker discharges the customer (the drawer) both as to the cheque and as to the consideration<sup>6</sup>.

2 A bearer cheque is one expressed to be payable to bearer or to a particular person or bearer: see PARA 879. As to cheques generally see PARAS 879-880.

3 Charles v Blackwell (1877) 2 CPD 151, CA (not liable to true owner).

4 Charles v Blackwell (1877) 2 CPD 151, CA.

5 This is referred to as discharge by payment in due course: see the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 59(1). See also PARA 1550. 'Holder' means the payee or indorsee of a bill or note who is in possession of it, or the bearer of it; and 'bearer' means the person in possession of a bill or note which is payable to bearer: s 2. See also PARA 1407. The definition of 'holder' merely requires possession without in any way limiting it to lawful possession. Neither definition involves any question of title.

6 Charles v Blackwell (1877) 2 CPD 151, CA. As to crossed cheques see the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 80; and PARA 838.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/838. Payment of crossed cheques in accordance with the crossing.

838. Payment of crossed cheques in accordance with the crossing.

A banker is protected if he pays a cheque, in good faith and without negligence, in accordance with its ostensible crossing<sup>1</sup>, notwithstanding that it may have been obliterated, or added to or altered otherwise than as authorised by the Bills of Exchange Act 1882<sup>2</sup>. 'Addition' means a material addition, effective under the provisions relating to crossed cheques; the addition of a memorandum such as 'account payee' would not justify the banker in refusing to pay the cheque, or in itself deprive him of protection in paying<sup>3</sup>. The 'opening' of a crossing, by writing 'pay cash' and initialling, is a patent alteration not authorised by the Act, and a banker pays such a cheque over the counter at the risk that the opening may prove unauthorised<sup>4</sup>. A banker paying in good faith and without negligence a cheque which at the time of presentation appears not to be crossed does not incur liability by reason only that the cheque was in fact or had been crossed<sup>5</sup>.

A banker paying a crossed cheque in good faith, without negligence<sup>6</sup>, and in accordance with the crossing, is protected, and may debit his customer, notwithstanding any defect of title in the collecting banker or the person from whom he received it<sup>7</sup>. If the cheque had come to the hands of the payee<sup>8</sup>, the drawer is discharged both on the cheque and on the consideration<sup>9</sup>.

Protection under the provisions relating to crossed cheques might be doubtful in the case of an open cheque crossed by a person having no authority to cross, such as an innocent person in possession under a forged indorsement, but the banker would be otherwise protected<sup>10</sup>.

The addition of 'not negotiable' to the crossing has no effect whatever on the paying banker, except to prevent his being a holder in due course<sup>11</sup>. 'Not negotiable' by itself, however, does not constitute a crossing<sup>12</sup>.

The banker's identification stamp may or may not be a crossing. If impressed on an open cheque by the collecting banker, it probably is. Similarly, the collecting banker's stamp on a cheque crossed generally would probably constitute it a cheque crossed specially to that banker<sup>13</sup>.

A banker paying a document, ostensibly a crossed cheque, to which his customer's name is forged as drawer is not protected; the instrument is not a cheque<sup>14</sup>.

1 Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 80 (amended by the Cheques Act 1992 s 2). See also PARA 1575. The practice of bankers may be relevant to negligence: see Arab Bank Ltd v Ross [1952] 2 QB 216 at 222, [1952] 1 All ER 709 at 713, CA, per Somervell LJ. As to negligence in relation to the practice of collecting bankers see PARA 884.

2 See the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 79(2) proviso. See also PARA 1575. The proviso is defectively drawn. The wording 'added to or altered' etc grammatically refers to the cheque, not the crossing, but the words are intended to apply to the latter: Slingsby v District Bank Ltd [1932] 1 KB 544, CA.

3 See Akrokerri (Atlantic) Mines Ltd v Economic Bank [1904] 2 KB 465 at 472 per Bigham J; and see PARA 895. The paying banker could, as a rule, have no knowledge for whose account the cheque was being collected. The only doubtful case would be where the cheque bore indorsements after that of the payee, and one was forged. Quære whether payment in such case would be 'in the ordinary course of business' or 'without negligence'. The 'provisions relating to crossed cheques' are the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 ss 76-81; and the Cheques Act 1957 s 4: see PARA 880.

4 The practice of banks is not to recognise the opening of cheques unless signed by the drawer and presented for payment by him or his known agent: see Questions on Banking Practice (11th Edn) no 344; and see also Smith and Baldwin v Barclays Bank Ltd (1944) 5 Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers 370, in which Stable J said, in relation to a cheque crossed 'not negotiable' over which were written the words 'please pay cash', that the alteration to the printed form did not make the instrument any the less a crossed cheque. The crossed cheque provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 (ss 76-81A) have effect in relation to the instruments, other than cheques, to which the Cheques Act 1957 s 4 (see PARA 882) applies as they have effect in relation to cheques: see s 5; and PARA 880. As to the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 81A see also PARA 836 note 2; and PARAS 895, 1500.

5 Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 79(2) proviso.

6 Payment on an irregular indorsement is negligence (Slingsby v District Bank Ltd [1932] 1 KB 544, CA), except as provided by the Cheques Act 1957 s 1, the protection of which is additional to that given by the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 80: see PARA 836. If the banker is both paying and collecting banker, he must also show himself not to have been negligent within the Cheques Act 1957 s 4: see PARAS 836, 882.

7 See the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 80 (as amended: see note 1).

8 It is presumed that 'constructive' coming to the payee's hands would be sufficient.

9 See the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 80 (as amended: see note 1).

10 Cf Simmons v Taylor (1857) 2 CBNS 528 at 539 per Cresswell J; affd (1858) 4 CBNS 463. However, if the cheque is an order cheque, the banker is protected under the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60 (see PARA 836); if a bearer cheque, by having paid to bearer. As to the meanings of 'order cheque' and 'bearer cheque' see PARA 879.

11 Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 81. See also PARA 1499. See Algemene Bank Nederland NV v Happy Valley Restaurant Pte Ltd [1991] 2 MLJ 289.

12 See the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 76. See also PARA 1411.

13 A collecting banker may specially cross to himself: Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 77(6). See also PARA 1411. Transverse lines are not necessary to constitute crossing where a banker's name is put across the face of the cheque: s 76(2). Bankers habitually stamp all cheques collected by them, whether crossed or not, and the stamp is frequently horizontal, not transverse or 'across' the face of the cheque. The latter point would probably not be considered material.

14 It is not a cheque, but a mere piece of paper: Imperial Bank of Canada v Bank of Hamilton [1903] AC 49, PC; and see PARA 850.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/839. Payment in contravention of the crossing.

839. Payment in contravention of the crossing.

The Bills of Exchange Act 1882 does not, as the earlier crossed cheques legislation did, directly prohibit a banker from paying in contravention of the crossing, except in the case of a cheque crossed to more than one banker, none of whom is an agent for collection<sup>1</sup>. However, a banker so doing<sup>2</sup> is liable to the true owner for any loss the latter may sustain as a result<sup>3</sup>. In the case of a forged indorsement, he would also lose the protection afforded by statute<sup>4</sup>, payment contrary to the crossing not being in the ordinary course of business<sup>5</sup>.

Notwithstanding the absence of the direct prohibition, a banker cannot charge his customer with the amount of a crossed cheque paid in contravention of the crossing<sup>6</sup>, even, it would seem, though payment was made to the true owner<sup>7</sup>.

The fact that a crossed cheque has been refused payment does not make it an open cheque for the purpose of re-presentation<sup>8</sup>; nor does the fact that a crossing has been opened or obliterated render it an uncrossed cheque<sup>9</sup>.

1 See the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 79(1). See also PARA 1575.

2 Payment by means of the bank's own cheque is sufficient payment: Meyer & Co Ltd v Sze Hai Tong Banking and Insurance Co Ltd [1913] AC 847, PC.

3 Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 79(2). But see Meyer & Co Ltd v Sze Hai Tong Banking and Insurance Co Ltd [1913] AC 847, PC (where the bank was protected by estoppel).

4 See under the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60: see PARA 836.

5 Smith v Union Bank of London (1875) 1 QBD 31, CA. See also the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 80; and PARA 838.

6 Smith v Union Bank of London (1875) 1 QBD 31, CA. In that case, there was a direct prohibition; but the disability to debit the customer was apparently based on disobedience to mandate (Bobbett v Pinkett (1876) 1 ExD 368). Such payments would clearly be made negligently. See also the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 79(2) proviso; the provision that, in the circumstances covered by the proviso, the payment 'shall not be questioned' implies that the customer may normally repudiate payment contrary to the crossing. See PARA 838.

7 Payment had been made to the true owner, the bona fide holder, in Smith v Union Bank of London (1875) 1 QBD 31, CA. Possibly, however, the court would apply the doctrine laid down in Reid v Rigby & Co [1894] 2 QB 40, Bevan v National Bank Ltd (1906) 23 TLR 65, and B Liggett (Liverpool) Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1928] 1 KB 48, as to adoption of a payment by taking the benefit of it. Contrast Lloyds Bank Ltd v Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China [1929] 1 KB 40, CA.

8 It remains a crossed cheque: cf Questions on Banking Practice (11th Edn) no 345.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/840. Domiciled bill.

840. Domiciled bill.

Where a customer accepts a domiciled bill payable at his bank<sup>1</sup>, it constitutes an authority to the banker to pay it at maturity<sup>2</sup> and, if no funds are available, amounts to a request for an overdraft to the amount of the bill; but, in the absence of previous arrangement, the banker is under no obligation to pay the bill, even though he has sufficient funds in hand<sup>3</sup>. Where such an obligation exists, the banker, in the absence of special terms, is under a duty to identify the person to whom he makes payment with the person named as payee<sup>4</sup>. There is no statutory protection in regard to the payment of a domiciled bill.

A banker who in good faith and without negligence pays a bill payable to bearer, so accepted, to the bearer of it may charge his customer with the amount<sup>5</sup>.

1 A bill is said to be domiciled when it is accepted payable at a bank or by another paying agent.

841. Cheques drawn in breach of trust.

It is not the banker's business or right to set up the title of persons other than his customer, and mere suspicion that a breach of trust is involved or intended in the drawing of a cheque on trust funds may not be sufficient to entitle the banker to refuse payment<sup>1</sup>. However, it is hardly conceivable that a court would award damages against the banker to a customer who had to admit, or against whom it was proved, that he drew the cheque for the purpose of defrauding the trust<sup>2</sup>.

842. Breach of trust designed to benefit banker.

A banker may not retain any benefit to himself from wrongful dealing with any fund he knows to be affected with a trust where such benefit has been designed or stipulated for by him<sup>1</sup>. A banker cannot assert his right of combination over an account known to be a trust account, whether so described or not<sup>2</sup>. A banker may, however, refuse to accept an account in any form which implies that it is affected by a trust<sup>3</sup>, but he is not at liberty to disregard intimations conveyed to him by the title or character in which the account is opened, or otherwise<sup>4</sup>.

1 Gray v Johnston (1868) LR 3 HL 1. In Foxton v Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Co (1881) 44 LT 406, Fry J appears to have held that the fact that the bank indirectly derived benefit from such dealing invalidated the transaction. In Coleman v Bucks and Oxon Union Bank [1897] 2 Ch 243, Byrne J shows that, to come within Gray v Johnston above, there must at least be an ascertained debt due to the bank, which on pressure by the bank is satisfied or reduced by payment from the trust account. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/843. The banker as constructive trustee.

843. The banker as constructive trustee.

Banks have been held liable as constructive trustees in circumstances wider than those of wrongfully obtaining by design or stipulation a benefit from a fund known to be affected by a trust<sup>1</sup>; and a constructive trust has been imposed upon a paying bank in circumstances where it has obtained no benefit for itself at all<sup>2</sup>. A bank may be held liable as constructive trustee even in respect of a payment made in accordance with its customer's mandate<sup>3</sup>. In relation to the category of constructive trusteeship known as dishonest assistance<sup>4</sup>, it is necessary to establish that the bank acted dishonestly<sup>5</sup>. The position is not as clear in relation to the other category of constructive trusteeship known as knowing receipt<sup>6</sup>, and the authorities conflict as to whether the bank will be liable when the relevant knowledge is merely of circumstances which would indicate the facts to an honest and reasonable person or would put an honest and reasonable person on inquiry or whether actual knowledge is required<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to the liability of a bank in such a case see PARA 842.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/844. Banker paying without authority.

844. Banker paying without authority.

Subject to questions of statutory protection, estoppel or adoption, a banker who has paid a cheque drawn without authority<sup>1</sup> or who has paid one in contravention of his customer's order, or, probably, negligently<sup>2</sup>, cannot debit the customer's account with the amount<sup>3</sup>. However, if such a cheque is paid in discharge of the customer's debts, the banker is entitled to take credit for it<sup>4</sup>.

The banker's duty in regard to the payment of cheques under a valid mandate is not necessarily fulfilled by his compliance with the mandate; he is under a contractual duty of care which may require him to question payment<sup>5</sup>.

When a company mandate authorises its bank to honour cheques if signed by any two signatories, but the board confers authority upon a single person to direct the transfer of a particular sum, the bank is entitled to act upon a cheque drawn on that person's single signature if he was acting within his authority<sup>6</sup>. If the bank fails to observe the discrepancy between the cheque and the mandate, or if it does so but makes no inquiries, it takes a risk in honouring the cheque that the sole signatory may not in fact be authorised<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to determination of authority to pay see PARA 847.

2 See the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 80 (protection to banker) which uses the words 'without negligence' (see PARA 838); Bellamy v Marjoribanks (1852) 7 Exch 389; Carlton v Ireland (1856) 5 E & B 765 at 770 per Crompton J. See also PARA 1575. The Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60 does not mention negligence: see PARA 836. ### 845. Wrongful dishonour.

If, without justification, a banker dishonours his customer's cheque, he is liable to the customer in damages for injury to credit<sup>1</sup>; but he is not liable to the holder except where, as only rarely happens, he holds funds appropriated to the particular cheque and has so informed the holder<sup>2</sup>. Proof of actual injury to credit is not necessary to secure substantial damages, either for a business customer<sup>3</sup> or for personal customers<sup>4</sup>. The answer on a cheque dishonoured on presentation by a third person<sup>5</sup> may constitute libel, but such cases are rare<sup>6</sup>; in such cases general damages may be awarded.

846. Time for payment.

If the bill is ostensibly in order, the banker must pay or refuse to pay at once. He is not entitled to time in which to decide whether he may safely pay<sup>1</sup>. Some doubt has, however, been cast on this view<sup>2</sup>. Where presentment is made through a clearing house, the banker is probably entitled to the time allowed by the rules of that establishment for deciding whether to pay or not.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/847. Determination of authority to pay.

847. Determination of authority to pay.

The duty and authority to pay a cheque drawn by a customer are determined:

- 9 (1) by countermand of payment, commonly known as stopping a cheque<sup>1</sup>;
- 10 (2) by notice of the customer's death<sup>2</sup>;
- 11 (3) by notice of the customer's mental disorder or lack of capacity, where it is of a degree preventing his understanding the transaction<sup>3</sup>;
- 12 (4) by notice of the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against the customer<sup>4</sup> or the making of a bankruptcy order against him<sup>5</sup>;
- 13 (5) by notice of the presentation of a winding-up petition where the customer is a limited company<sup>6</sup>, or of the passing of a resolution for voluntary winding-up<sup>7</sup>.

The duty and authority of a bank to pay money from a client's account may also be established by a direct debit mandate. It has been suggested that failure to implement a properly concluded mandate might be breach of an implied term of a contract between the bank and its customer<sup>8</sup>, but such a mandate does not confer on a creditor any rights of the debtor against his own bank<sup>9</sup>. It has been held that cancelling a direct debit mandate is equivalent to countermanding a payment by cheque<sup>10</sup>.

1 Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 75; Mclean v Clydesdale Banking Co (1883) 9 App Cas 95, HL. See also PARA 1403. As between separate branches of a bank there is a right to separate notice of countermand: London Provincial and South-Western Bank v Buszard (1918) 35 TLR 142. As to payment contrary to instructions see Twibell v London Suburban Bank [1869] WN 127; Bale v Parr's Bank Ltd (1909) 25 TLR 549; Reade v Royal Bank of Ireland Ltd [1922] 2 IR 22, CA. As to the authority of a principal to stop payment on an account, which he has opened in favour of an agent, see Société Coloniale Anversoise v London and Brazilian Bank Ltd [1911] 2 KB 1024. As to countermand addressed to a branch substituted by alteration, the cheque being magnetically lettered to the original branch addressee, see Burnett v Westminster Bank Ltd [1966] 1 QB 742, [1965] 3 All ER 81; and see also Andrews v Andrews 1967 SLT 14. As to joint accounts see PARA 823. Apart from any question of mandate, one partner has power to stop a cheque issued in the firm name, and one executor has power to stop a cheque signed by another: Gaunt v Taylor (1843) 2 Hare 413.

Stopping by teletransmission is sufficient: see Curtice v London City and Midland Bank Ltd [1908] 1 KB 293, CA (where it was held that, though a telegram countermanding a cheque might reasonably be acted upon by a banker, an unauthenticated telegram was not sufficient authority for refusing payment). See also Reade v Royal Bank of Ireland Ltd above; Westminster Bank Ltd v Hilton (1926) 136 LT 315. See further the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 and 2007 Revisions), which uses the expression 'teletransmission' (see art 11; and PARA 932).

Where a banker has marked a cheque at the instance of the customer, the customer probably cannot countermand payment of the cheque after issue. By so marking (see PARA 835), the banker probably becomes bound to pay to any other banker presenting it: cf Goodwin v Roberts (1875) LR 10 Exch 337; Gaden v Newfoundland Savings Bank [1899] AC 281, PC; Imperial Bank of Canada v Bank of Hamilton [1903] AC 49, PC. See also Bank of Baroda Ltd v Punjab National Bank Ltd [1944] AC 176, [1944] 2 All ER 83, PC, in which English law and practice are considered. The Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 75 does not include the case as an exception, but the banker is in the position of an agent with an interest: see further generally AGENCY. Even if the cheque is not crossed, it might be presented through a banker, or be subsequently crossed.

2 Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 75. Cf Rogerson v Ladbroke (1822) 1 Bing 93. Where one of two or more partners or customers on joint account dies, the survivors or survivor may, as a rule, still draw on the account (see PARA 833); but, on the death of one of several trustees, the banker may not honour cheques on the trust account drawn by the survivor or survivors unless satisfied of his or their power so to draw under the terms of the trust, or in exercise of statutory authority (see the Trustee Act 1925 s 18; PARA 833; and TRUSTS vol 48 (2007 Reissue) PARAS 817, 981, 983).

4 Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 97(1); Insolvency Act 1986 s 284. See also PARA 1608. The right and duty to refuse payment in such case arise not so much from the actual determination of the customer's authority as from the provisions of the bankruptcy legislation: see further BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/848. Cheque not drawn by customer.

848. Cheque not drawn by customer.

It would appear that a cheque, being a bill of exchange drawn on a banker, payable on demand, need not be drawn by a customer<sup>1</sup>, although payment of such a cheque would hardly be in the ordinary course of banking business. The protection extends to an instrument carrying a per pro indorsement<sup>2</sup>.

1 See Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240, HL, where protection was accorded to banker's drafts (see PARA 896) under the Stamp Act 1853 s 19 (see PARA 896), in which the words 'drawn on a banker' are the same as in the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60 (see PARA 836). The history of the legislation given in Charles v Blackwell (1877) 2 CPD 151 at 156, CA, and in Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon above at 250 per Lord Lindley should, however, be considered. There is nothing about 'ordinary course of business' in the Stamp Act 1853 s 19, but s 19 has been held to have been impliedly repealed by the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60 as regards bills and cheques: see Carpenters' Co v British Mutual Banking Co [1938] 1 KB 511, [1937] 3 All ER 811, CA. See also PARA 833.

2 Charles v Blackwell (1877) 2 CPD 151, CA, decided in relation to the Stamp Act 1853 s 19, but applicable to the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60 (see PARA 836). As to per pro indorsements see PARA 892.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/849. Cheques materially altered.

849. Cheques materially altered.

Whether a material alteration of a cheque precludes the banker from debiting his customer with the whole or part of the cheque appears to depend on the character and effect of the alteration<sup>1</sup>. If, despite the alteration, the customer's mandate has been substantially complied with, it is submitted that the banker may charge the customer<sup>2</sup>. If the alteration is in the amount, it would seem that the banker may be entitled to debit the customer with the amount originally inserted<sup>3</sup>.

1 The cases do not agree. The decision in Simmons v Taylor (1857) 2 CBNS 528 at 539, 541 (affd (1858) 4 CBNS 463) implies that any material alteration would absolutely debar the banker from debiting, for the cheque must be the customer's cheque in all respects. Other cases point the other way, as only the excess amount seems to have been treated as disputable: see Hall v Fuller (1826) 5 B & C 750 (date and amount altered); Young v Grote (1827) 4 Bing 253 (amount altered); Halifax Union v Wheelwright (1875) LR 10 Exch 183; Imperial Bank of Canada v Bank of Hamilton [1903] AC 49, PC (amount altered; in this case the cheque was described as good for the original amount). See also London Joint Stock Bank Ltd v Macmillan and Arthur [1918] AC 777, HL; and PARA 829 note 1. The alteration of an amount of money in the old currency to the equivalent decimal amount is not a material alteration for the purposes of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 64(1) (by which a bill materially altered is avoided except against a party who has made, authorised or assented to the alteration, and subsequent indorsers: see PARA 1559): see the Decimal Currency Act 1969 s 3(2).

2 The paying banker, not being a holder, cannot avail himself of the Bills of Exchange 1882 s 64(1) proviso (by which a material alteration which is not apparent does not prevent a holder in due course from availing himself of a bill: see PARA 1559). It is submitted that that provision avoids the bill only as between the parties. Cf the common law rule as stated by Brett LJ in Suffell v Bank of England (1882) 9 QBD 555 at 568, CA, where he limited the avoidance to a party suing on the bill or setting it up as a direct defence. This is not the banker's position; he sets it up as an authority, not a bill. The ground alleged for the rule, namely that the bill must have been altered with the privity or by the neglect of the holder (see Davidson v Cooper (1843) 11 M & W 778, Ex Ch), is inapplicable to the banker. Alteration of the date of a cheque is a material alteration (Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 64(2); Vance v Lowther (1876) 1 ExD 176), but it would be unreasonable if the alteration to an earlier date debarred the banker from debiting the customer, if paid after the original date. A bank collecting a stolen cheque or paying a draft which has been materially altered by the payee's name being fraudulently changed is not liable in conversion because the instrument is avoided under the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 64(1) (see PARA 1559): Smith v Lloyds TSB Group plc, Harvey Jones Ltd v Woolwich plc [2001] QB 541, [2001] 1 All ER 424, [2000] 2 All ER (Comm) 693, CA.

850. Payment on forged cheque.

A document in cheque form on which the customer's name as drawer is forged or placed without authority is not a cheque but a nullity; and, unless the banker can establish adoption or estoppel, he may not debit the customer with any payment made on it<sup>1</sup>.

The common aphorism that a banker is under a duty to know his customer's signature is in fact incorrect, even as between the banker and his customer; the principle is simply that a banker may not debit his customer's account on the basis of a forged signature, since he has in that event no mandate from the customer for doing so<sup>2</sup>.

851. Payment of bill on forged acceptance or indorsement.

A banker who has paid a bill on a forged acceptance may not charge his customer with the amount, unless the customer is precluded by estoppel or adoption from disputing his signature<sup>1</sup>.

A banker who has paid a bill on a forged indorsement may not charge his customer unless the customer is estopped from disputing the payment<sup>2</sup>. Negligence on the part of the customer directly leading to or enabling the loss, or a representation made to the banker by the customer on a material point on which the banker acted by paying money which he would not otherwise have paid, might constitute such estoppel<sup>3</sup>. Acceptance of a bill on which the payee's indorsement has been forged does not, however, stop the customer from refusing to be debited<sup>4</sup>.

If, however, the payee is a fictitious or non-existent person, the bill may be treated as payable to bearer<sup>5</sup>, and the banker may charge his customer, notwithstanding the forged indorsement.

Where a banker has paid a bill on a forged indorsement, he is liable for the amount to the true owner in conversion or for money had and received<sup>6</sup>.

There is no protection in such a case for the banker similar to that given by the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60 (see PARAS 836, 1552) with regard to demand drafts or cheques, or by the Stamp Act 1853 s 19 (see PARA 896) with regard to drafts or orders payable to order on demand drawn on a banker. As to forged or unauthorised signatures see also the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 24 (and see PARA 1425).

3 See Bank of England v Vagliano Bros [1891] AC 107, HL. The banker acts as agent for the customer in paying domiciled bills, and as such is entitled to the protection and consideration usually accorded to an agent. As to domiciled bills see PARA 840.

Quaere, however, whether the banker could not escape this liability by returning the bill, if still in his possession, to the true owner, the cancellation of the acceptance being treated as made under a mistake within the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 63(3) (see PARA 1556). See Castrique v Imrie (1870) LR 4 HL 414 at 435 per Blackburn J, referring to Novelli v Rossi (1831) 2 B & Ad 757. This course seems suggested by Charles v Blackwell (1877) 2 CPD 151, CA. The acceptor would still be liable to the true owner, the bill not being discharged by the payment to the person wrongfully in possession of it.

852. The principle in Cocks v Masterman.

The claim of a bank to recover money paid on a document which is a bill or cheque, and not a nullity ab initio, has been defeated<sup>1</sup> by a defence founded on the need to give notice of dishonour<sup>2</sup>. It seems that the principle which applies<sup>3</sup> is that, if the claimant fails to give notice on the day of payment that the bill contains a forged signature, and the money, having been paid in ignorance of that fact, is being claimed back, the defendant is deprived of the opportunity of giving notice of dishonour on the day when the bill falls due, and so is deemed to have changed his position and has a good defence to the claim on that ground<sup>4</sup>. The principle has been described as stringent<sup>5</sup> and very technical<sup>6</sup> and it is unlikely to be extended.

The defence appears to be available to a payee of a bill or cheque held under genuine indorsements following forged ones, since the holder's remedy against the indorsers subsequent to the forgery is on the instrument by estoppel and dependent on giving notice of dishonour in due time<sup>7</sup>. Where a person holds immediately under a forged indorsement, the banker is prima facie entitled to recover the money from him if demanded within a reasonable time after payment.

The principle mentioned above has no application where notice of dishonour is dispensed with<sup>8</sup>, as where the drawer of a cheque countermands payment<sup>9</sup>. The principle is not founded upon estoppel by representation, and the mere honouring of an undetectably forged cheque does not amount to a representation by the bank that the cheque is genuine, whether the cheque is presented for special collection or cleared in the normal way<sup>10</sup>.

1 The authorities are analysed by Kerr J in National Westminster Bank Ltd v Barclays Bank International Ltd [1975] QB 654, [1974] 3 All ER 834.

2 For cases which adopt this analysis of the true foundation of the defence see Imperial Bank of Canada v Bank of Hamilton [1903] AC 49 at 58, PC; National Westminster Bank Ltd v Barclays Bank International Ltd [1975] QB 654 at 668, [1974] 3 All ER 834 at 846 per Kerr J; Barclays Bank Ltd v WJ Simms Son & Cooke (Southern) Ltd [1980] QB 677 at 701, [1979] 3 All ER 522 at 541 per Robert Goff J. It may be noticed that in the leading case (Cocks v Masterman (1829) 9 B & C 902) the prejudice to the holder was defined as being the loss of his right to take steps against other parties to the bill the same day as it is dishonoured. This must refer to his immediate right of recourse on dishonour (Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 47(2)) or the equally immediate right to give notice (s 49(12)) (see also PARAS 1525, 1531). There is no right of action until the next day (Kennedy v Thomas [1894] 2 QB 759, CA), and the right to give notice would hardly ever be lost until the next day (Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 49(12)). This would seem to point to deprivation of the immediate right, not loss of the power to give notice, as the test. See also Smith v Mercer (1815) 6 Taunt 76 at 87 per Gibbs LJ ('The defendants, while the bill continued paid, could not have given notice to him (the indorser), for the bill was not then dishonoured'); and Barclays Bank Ltd v WJ Simms Son & Cooke (Southern) Ltd above at 702 and 541-542 per Robert Goff J.

7 The remedy is not based on warranty, which applies only to a transferor by delivery: see the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 58; and PARA 1581. As to the estoppel of the indorser from denying the genuineness of previous indorsements see s 55(2)(b); and as to his liability to compensate the holder, subject to notice of dishonour being duly given, see s 55(2)(a). See also PARA 1577, 1578. Although the person in possession is not strictly a holder in due course, or even a holder, he is entitled by estoppel against indorsers subsequent to the forgery. See also generally ESTOPPEL.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/853. Mistake of fact or law; recovery of money paid.

853. Mistake of fact or law; recovery of money paid.

If a person pays money to another under a mistake<sup>1</sup> which causes him to make the payment, he is prima facie entitled to recover it as money paid under a mistake<sup>2</sup>. A payment is made under a mistake of fact if it is so made honestly, notwithstanding that the payer has means, of which he did not avail himself, of knowing the true facts<sup>3</sup>. His claim may, however, fail if: (1) the payer intends that the payee is to have the money at all events, whether the fact be true or false, or is deemed in law so to intend<sup>4</sup>; or (2) the payment is made for good consideration, in particular if the money is paid to discharge, and does discharge, a debt owed to the payee, or a principal on whose behalf he is authorised to receive the payment, by the payer or by a third party by whom he is authorised to discharge the debt<sup>5</sup>; or (3) the payee has changed his position in good faith<sup>6</sup> or is deemed in law to have done so<sup>7</sup>. However, it is not necessary, in order to ground recovery, for the mistake: (a) to have induced the payer to believe that he was liable to pay the money to the payee or his principal; or (b) to be 'as between' the payer and the payee<sup>8</sup>.

Where a bank pays a cheque drawn on it by a customer, the bank's entitlement to recover the payment on the ground that it was paid under a mistake depends on whether the payment was effected with or without mandate<sup>9</sup>. Where the bank pays within its mandate, it has a right of recourse against its customer and its customer's obligation to the payee is discharged; the payee having given consideration for the payment, the money is irrecoverable unless the transaction itself is set aside. Where the bank pays without mandate, it has no recourse against its customer, the customer's debt to the payee is not discharged, and prima facie the bank may recover payment<sup>10</sup>.

If payment is made to a bank acting as agent for a person as to whose identity there is a mistake of fact, and, before the mistake is discovered, the money has been paid by the bank to its principal, the payer cannot recover the amount from the bank<sup>11</sup>. Wherever money is received by an agent who, without knowledge of the mistake, pays it over to his principal, it cannot be recovered<sup>12</sup>.

Where money is paid on a negotiable instrument to a person innocent of any knowledge of mistake, it cannot be recovered if the payee's position might, but not necessarily would, be affected if he had to refund<sup>13</sup>. A mistake of fact in relation to negotiable instruments must be as to the instrument itself<sup>14</sup>.

Where the money has been received in bad faith, it may be recovered by the payer<sup>15</sup>.

1 The former rule of law that money was not recoverable if paid under a mistake of law (as distinct from a mistake of fact) was abrogated by the House of Lords in Kleinwort Benson Ltd v Lincoln City Council [1999] 2 AC 349, [1998] 4 All ER 513, HL. See further MISTAKE vol 77 (2010) PARA 11.

854. Estoppel, ratification and adoption.

Mere silence or inaction cannot amount to a representation unless there is a duty to disclose or to act<sup>1</sup>. The customer owes his bank a duty to inform it of any forgery of a cheque purportedly drawn on the account as soon as he, the customer, becomes aware of it<sup>2</sup> or has reasonable grounds for believing it<sup>3</sup>. If he fails to do so within a reasonable time, and the bank alters its position for the worse, he is estopped from setting up the forgery<sup>4</sup>.

Ratification of a forged signature on a bill is not possible<sup>5</sup>. Adoption of such a signature requires valuable consideration<sup>6</sup>.

An estoppel was upheld in London Intercontinental Trust Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1980] 1 Lloyd's Rep 241, but this ground of the decision may be open to doubt in the light of the decision in Tai Hing Cotton Mill Ltd v Liu Chong Hing Bank Ltd above. A person who allows his banker to pay a cheque to which his name has been forged is not estopped from disputing a subsequent forgery by the same hand unless the repetition of such payment establishes a course of business authorising the use of his name: Morris v Bethell (1869) LR 5 CP 47.

See also Brook v Hook (1871) LR 6 Exch 89; Greenwood v Martin's Bank Ltd [1932] 1 KB 371 at 379, CA, per Scrutton LJ, and at 385 per Greer LJ (on appeal [1933] AC 51, HL, where the decision in the Court of Appeal was affirmed without dealing with this point); Brown v Westminster Bank Ltd [1964] 2 Lloyd's Rep 187. The decision in Brook v Hook above was made at a time when a person who remained silent when he knew that a forgery had been committed was guilty of the offence of misprision of felony. The modern equivalent (concealing an offence) is not committed if the only consideration for remaining silent is the making good of the loss caused or the making of reasonable compensation for it: see the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 5(1); and CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(2) (2006 Reissue) PARA 734. Quaere whether this affects the principle of Brook v Hook above. ### 855. Fictitious payee.

A cheque of which the payee is a fictitious or non-existent person may be treated as payable to bearer<sup>1</sup>, though ostensibly payable to that payee or order<sup>2</sup>. Where the payee is a real person known to the drawer and intended by him to have the benefit of the cheque, although the drawer is induced to insert the name and draw by fraudulent representations of a third party, the ostensible payee could never enforce payment of the cheque<sup>3</sup>. In such case, however, the paying banker would usually be protected as having paid on a forged indorsement<sup>4</sup>. It would appear that documents made payable to an impersonal payee or order (for example, 'wages or order' or 'petty cash or order') are not within the statutory rule<sup>5</sup>; they are not bills of exchange, since these require payment to a specified person<sup>6</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'bearer cheque' see PARA 879. An order cheque on which the last or only indorsement is an indorsement in blank is equally payable to bearer: Bills of Exchange Act 1882 ss 8(3), 73. As to cheques generally see PARAS 879-880. See also PARAS 1405, 1410, 1428.

A bank has been held not entitled to rely on provisions corresponding to the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 7(3) where the name of the fictitious payee had been inserted in the cheque by an employee of the drawer with intent to defraud the drawer, and the cheque was marked 'not negotiable; account payee only': Rhostar (Pvt) Ltd v Netherlands Bank of Rhodesia Ltd 1972 (2) SA 703.

Where a person claims payment of an open order cheque over the counter, alleging that he is the payee of it, and only signs his name on the back at the request of the banker, it is submitted that the banker does not obtain protection<sup>1</sup>. The signature probably represents only a receipt<sup>2</sup>.

1 This view is supported by Lord Haldane LC in Gerald McDonald & Co v Nash & Co [1924] AC 625 at 633-634, HL. 'Indorsement' means an indorsement completed by delivery: Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 2. See also PARA 1407. There can be no delivery to the drawee. The terms of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60 (see PARA 836 note 3; see also PARA 1552) as to 'indorsement of the payee or any subsequent indorsement' point to the indorsement being for negotiation, or at least collection; and those as to the banker being deemed to have paid the bill in due course, notwithstanding the forged indorsement, imply payment made to an ostensible holder under the indorsement: see Keene v Beard (1860) 8 CBNS 372 at 382, where Byles J held such signature a receipt, not an indorsement. Cf the Finance Act 1895 s 9 (repealed), treating such signature as a receipt. See Charles v Blackwell (1877) 2 CPD 151 at 157, CA, per Cockburn CJ. As to the meaning of 'order cheque' see PARA 879.

2 See note 1. Whether the Cheques Act 1957 s 1 (see PARA 836; and also PARA 1552) affords protection if the cheque is paid in good faith and in the ordinary course of business is yet to be determined; although presumably it does. The point will now rarely arise since banks will not normally pay a cheque in cash except for the account holder himself.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/857. Following money in equity.

857. Following money in equity.

Equity will intervene to prevent a defendant from acting in an unconscionable manner; and money, or the credit which results from a customer paying in a cheque<sup>1</sup>, may be followed into the hands of a banker, being a volunteer, by any person who has equal or superior right in equity to the money or the chose or thing in action<sup>2</sup>.

Where executors mistakenly paid a legacy to a charity which was not entitled to it, and the amount of the legacy was credited to the charity by the bank of which the charity was the customer, and the means of identifying the money or disentangling it remained, the true beneficial owner was entitled to follow the testator's property into the hands of the bank and obtain repayment<sup>3</sup>. If the amount of the legacy has been mixed with the customer's own money in his bank account, the customer and the true beneficiary, having equal equities, are entitled to share the fund (that is to say, the amount credited by the bank to the customer), for, if both the customer and the true beneficial owner are innocent, equity will not regard it as unconscionable for the customer to put forward a claim to retain his own money<sup>4</sup>; although, if the banking account was an active account, money first paid into it would prima facie be treated as having been first paid out<sup>5</sup>. If, however, the customer is in a fiduciary capacity towards the true owner, it will be unconscionable for the customer to advance his own claim and accordingly the true owner will have priority<sup>6</sup>. Further, if the customer is not a volunteer, but is a purchaser for value without notice in respect of the cheque or money which he pays into his banking account, the title of the true owner will neither prevail over nor rank equally with that of the customer and the money will not be able to be followed into the customer's banking account<sup>7</sup>. Equity does not permit tracing into an overdrawn account<sup>8</sup>.

Mere payment under a mistake<sup>9</sup> does not found an equitable relationship nor give the payer an equitable interest in the funds<sup>10</sup>.

858. Assignment and transfer of deposit account.

A deposit account, being a chose or thing in action, may be assigned as a whole under the Law of Property Act 1925<sup>1</sup>, but the mere transfer of a deposit receipt does not constitute such an assignment<sup>2</sup>.

A deposit receipt, even if in terms it is expressed to be transferable, has never been recognised as a negotiable instrument, or as giving the transferee a right to sue in his own name<sup>3</sup>. It is possible that a bank, having issued the document in a transferable form, might be estopped from disputing its character as such. Where a form of cheque is printed on the back of a deposit receipt, and any conditions imposed, such as previous notice, have been fulfilled, the bank cannot, as between itself and the depositor, refuse to pay the holder<sup>4</sup>. Payment to a person wrongfully dealing with even a signed deposit receipt is no discharge to the bank, unless the depositor is estopped by his conduct from disputing such payment<sup>5</sup>.

A deposit receipt<sup>6</sup> or deposit account books of a bank<sup>7</sup>, being essential indications of title, may be the subject of a donatio mortis causa although they may not contain all the material terms of the contract with the bank<sup>8</sup>, and the court will compel the legal representatives of the deceased to facilitate the receipt of the money by the donee<sup>9</sup>. Where a document combining the features of a deposit receipt and a cheque is so given, the validity of the gift will depend on which is the predominant characteristic<sup>10</sup>.

A deposit may be the subject of attachment by a third party debt order<sup>11</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ii) Payment of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Paying Banker/859. Payment in by third persons.

859. Payment in by third persons.

Money may be paid into a customer's current account by a third person<sup>1</sup>, and, in ordinary cases, the banker is bound to accept it. However, where a cheque for an amount larger than the available balance is presented for payment, it has been said that the banker should not allow the holder to pay in the deficit, and then pay the cheque<sup>2</sup>. The receipt of rent by a bank into the owner's banking account does not change the relationship between the two from that of banker and customer<sup>3</sup>.

1     This is common practice in the operation of the bank giro system, whereby a person may pay money into any bank to the credit of the current account of any person at any branch of any bank operating the system.

2     To do so would be unjustifiable disclosure of the customer's affairs, and, if followed by receipt of the difference and payment of the cheque, might constitute a fraud on other creditors of the customer: Foster v Bank of London (1862) 3 F & F 214; Hardy v Veasey (1868) LR 3 Exch 107.

(iii) Banker's Lien

860. Banker's lien.

The general lien of bankers is part of the law merchant as judicially recognised<sup>1</sup>; it connotes the right of a banker to retain the subject matter of the lien until an indebtedness of the customer is paid or discharged. It attaches to all securities<sup>2</sup> deposited with a banker as a banker by a customer, or by a third party on a customer's account, to instruments paid in for collection<sup>3</sup>, and to money held to the account of a customer<sup>4</sup>, unless there is an express or implied contract between the banker and the customer which is inconsistent with the lien<sup>5</sup>. In the case of money, the banker's right is often a right of set-off; it arises only in relation to the customer's money and does not apply to money paid in under a mistake of fact<sup>6</sup>.

Where there is a contract inconsistent with the lien, it determines when the relationship of banker and customer ends, as on the liquidation of a company which is a customer<sup>7</sup>.

The lien is not limited to fully negotiable securities<sup>8</sup>, but has been held to cover share certificates<sup>9</sup>, an order to pay a particular person a sum of money<sup>10</sup>, and an insurance policy<sup>11</sup>.

4 Roxburghe v Cox (1881) 17 ChD 520, CA; Misa v Currie (1876) 1 App Cas 554, HL. Money is, however, not usually the subject of lien, not being capable of being earmarked; the banker's claim in such cases is probably more rightly referred to as set-off: see Roxburghe v Cox above. It has been held that a bank has no lien but only a right of set-off in respect of a customer's account: Re Morris, Coneys v Morris [1922] 1 IR 136, CA. ### 861. Lien over bills.

A banker has a lien on a bill handed to him by a customer for collection, if the customer is or becomes indebted to him<sup>1</sup>. If the customer has indorsed the bill, the banker has a remedy on it against the customer to the extent of such indebtedness<sup>2</sup>. Mere indorsement for collection, without indebtedness, gives no such title or remedy<sup>3</sup>, nor does indorsement necessarily imply parting with the entire property in the bill<sup>4</sup>. Whether the customer parts with the entire property depends on the nature of the dealing between him and the banker. Entering as cash before receipt of the money has been held evidence only of the banker's having taken the bill in his own right<sup>5</sup>. Whether it has greater effect now is doubtful<sup>6</sup>. It would seem to constitute an undertaking by the banker to honour cheques to the amount of the bill<sup>7</sup>.

In the case of an unindorsed order cheque, the banker has the same rights as if the holder had indorsed in blank<sup>8</sup>.

862. When lien attaches.

Whatever the nature of the securities, the lien attaches only when they have come to the banker's hands in his capacity as a banker, that is to say, in the way of his business<sup>1</sup>. The common example is cheques paid in for collection, where the customer paying in has an overdraft or loan, or is entitled or permitted to draw against the cheques before they are cleared or then and there borrows against them<sup>2</sup>.

Either because the receipt of securities or valuables for safe custody is not part of the ordinary business of banking, or because receipt for such purposes involves an implied contract inconsistent with the assertion of lien, the lien does not attach to securities or articles in the banker's hands for safe custody<sup>3</sup>. Nor does the lien attach to any money or security known to the banker to be affected by a trust or not to be the actual property of the customer<sup>4</sup>, or to money paid in by a third person under mistake of fact<sup>5</sup>. Where securities are deposited which involve the collection of coupons or interest, the question is which component part is received for safe custody, and which is for the exercise thereon of the banker's business<sup>6</sup>.

Bills or money paid in to meet specific cheques or bills accepted payable at the bank are not subject to the lien<sup>7</sup>. Whether securities deposited to cover a specific advance, and, after repayment of that advance, remaining in the banker's hands, are subject to a general lien for a balance due to the banker, seems somewhat doubtful<sup>8</sup>.

Where, however, the security has been realised and produces more than enough to cover the specific advance, the banker's lien attaches to the surplus proceeds<sup>9</sup>.

The banker's lien extends to bills of a customer of another bank transmitted by that bank for collection, unless the receiving banker has notice that the bills are the property of that customer<sup>10</sup>.

Where bills, notes or cheques pass from a customer to a bank who takes them for collection, the banker is holder for value to the extent of any lien he may have<sup>11</sup>, and has full beneficial interest to that extent<sup>12</sup>, and may sue for the full amount, holding any surplus over the customer's indebtedness as trustee for him<sup>13</sup>. Where he holds as transferee, lien is excluded, but he has the ordinary rights of a holder for value, and may sue for the full amount irrespective of the customer's indebtedness, and without having to account for any balance received by him in excess of such indebtedness<sup>14</sup>.

6 Where bonds are deposited with a banker for him to cut off the coupons and collect them, the lien probably attaches to the bonds and coupons. However, if the bonds and coupons are deposited merely for safe keeping and the customer cuts off the coupons and hands them to the banker to collect, the lien attaches to the coupons when handed to the banker, but not to the bonds.

7 Farley v Turner (1857) 26 LJ Ch 710. See also PARA 865.

8 This was doubted in Jones v Peppercorne (1858) John 430. In Wilkinson v London and County Banking Co (1884) 1 TLR 63, the House of Lords assumed that the customer was entitled to have back the securities in such a case independent of the state of account. In Re Bowes, Earl of Strathmore v Vane (1886) 33 ChD 586, North J held an agreement that a policy of insurance was to be security for £2,000 inconsistent with a general lien for a further balance of £1,000. However, in Re London and Globe Finance Corp Ltd [1902] 2 Ch 416, Buckley J held that securities deposited as cover for specified advances remaining after discharge in a banker's hands were liable to general lien. Cf Wolstenholm v Sheffield Union Banking Co Ltd (1886) 54 LT 746, CA. It would seem that, where securities are jointly deposited to cover a joint liability, one of the depositors, on paying his share of the liability, is not entitled to the return of a proportionate amount of the securities: Coats v Union Bank of Scotland 1929 SC (HL) 114. In view of the terms of forms of charge now used this question is probably academic.

863. Sale by virtue of lien.

The banker's lien is something more than an ordinary lien; it is an implied pledge<sup>1</sup>. The distinction is not material in the case of bills, notes and cheques, the position of holder for value enabling the banker to deal with these when due; but, in the case of other negotiable instruments, such as bearer bonds, coming into the banker's hands in circumstances rendering them liable to the lien, his character of pledgee enables the banker to sell on default if a fixed time is appointed for repayment of the advance, or, where no time is fixed, after request for repayment and reasonable notice of intention to sell<sup>2</sup>.

1 See Brandao v Barnett (1846) 12 Cl & Fin 787 at 806 per Lord Campbell. As to lien generally see LIEN; and as to pledge generally see PLEDGES AND PAWNS.

2 Burdick v Sewell (1884) 13 QBD 159 at 174, CA, per Bowen LJ in a dissenting judgment which was upheld on appeal sub nom Sewell v Burdick (1884) 10 App Cas 74, HL; Re Morritt, ex p Official Receiver (1886) 18 QBD 222, CA; Re Richardson, Shillito v Hobson (1885) 30 ChD 396 at 403, CA, per Fry LJ; Deverges v Sandeman, Clark & Co [1902] 1 Ch 579, CA. It is desirable to give notice of intention to sell, even when a time is fixed for repayment. The statement by Lord Herschell in North Western Bank v John Poynter, Son and Macdonalds [1895] AC 56 at 69, HL, that a pledge gives no right of sale, must either have reference to Scots law, or to the absolute and immediate right of sale given in that case.

864. Banker's duty in respect of bills etc subject to lien.

The fact that the banker holds bills, notes or cheques under a lien does not affect his duty as holder to present them for acceptance where necessary, and for payment in due course, and to give notice of dishonour<sup>1</sup>. Although there is some authority for saying that a banker who holds indorsed bills under a lien is entitled to negotiate them when the state of the customer's account renders such a course reasonable<sup>2</sup>, it would be very unusual to do so<sup>3</sup>.

1 This course is equally obligatory on him either as agent or holder for value. As to the duties of a holder see the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 ss 39-52 (ss 41, 45, 49, 51 as amended); and PARA 1509 et seq. As to the duties of an agent see AGENCY vol 1 (2008) PARA 74 et seq. As to lien generally see LIEN.

2 See PARA 888.

3 However, if he holds them as transferee for value, he may, of course, deal with them in any way he likes.

(iv) Appropriation of Payments; Combining Accounts; Third Party Debt Orders

865. Repayment and appropriation.

The Limitation Act 1980 imposes time limits for the bringing of proceedings<sup>1</sup>. The balance on a current banking account is not actionable until the customer has demanded it or part of it, and time under that Act begins to run only from the date of the demand<sup>2</sup>. After a lapse of time the circumstances of the case may raise a presumption of repayment<sup>3</sup>.

On a current account, the earlier drawings out are, in the absence of appropriation, attributed to the earlier payments in<sup>4</sup>; and, where the money of several beneficiaries has been wrongfully mixed with a private account, their respective rights in any balance will be adjusted in accordance with this rule<sup>5</sup>. There are, however, exceptions to this rule; thus, where a trustee or other person in a fiduciary position has mixed sums of trust money in his private account, all drawings out are attributed to his own money so far as it will go<sup>6</sup>, and the rule may be excluded by the terms of a guarantee<sup>7</sup>, or, it seems, by sums being earmarked as particular property, such as a legacy<sup>8</sup>. The person paying the money has the primary right to say to what account it is to be appropriated; if the debtor makes no appropriation, the creditor has the right to appropriate; and, if neither exercises the right of appropriation, one may look on the matter as one of account and see how the creditor has dealt with the payment in order to ascertain how in fact he did appropriate it. If there is nothing more than a current account kept by the creditor or a particular account kept by the creditor, and he carries the money to that particular account, then the court concludes that the appropriation has been made; and, having been made, it is made once for all, and it does not lie in the mouth of the creditor afterwards to seek to vary that appropriation<sup>9</sup>. Money paid into a current account to meet a particular bill or cheque must be applied accordingly<sup>10</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(iv) Appropriation of Payments; Combining Accounts; Third Party Debt Orders/866. Appropriation when account guaranteed.

866. Appropriation when account guaranteed.

The position and rights of a banker under a guarantee depend on the character and form of the guarantee and the parties to it<sup>1</sup>. A guarantee for a void debt cannot be enforced<sup>2</sup> unless it also takes effect as an unconditional indemnity.

Where there is a mere unbroken current account, part of which is covered by a guarantee, the other part not, as where the guarantee has been determined, there is, in the absence of appropriation, no presumption that money paid in is to be allocated to the unsecured rather than the secured portion or otherwise than in the usual sequence of payments in and out in order of date<sup>3</sup>.

Where the guarantee is a continuing one, a guarantor has no right, in the absence of special agreement, to control the appropriation of payments into the principal debtor's account<sup>4</sup>, so long as the banker deals with the accounts in the ordinary way of business<sup>5</sup>.

Payments in by the principal debtor or any third party may be appropriated to a pre-existing debt of which the surety had no notice or knowledge<sup>6</sup>; but it would be contrary to ordinary business and good faith to open a new account during the currency of the guaranteed one, and carry all payments in to the new account<sup>7</sup>. On the determination of the guarantee, the banker may, however, close the account and open a new one, to which he may carry all payments in, leaving any debit on the old one to be covered by the guarantee<sup>8</sup>. Where an account is guaranteed to a limited extent, the banker is not entitled to split that account during the continuance of the guarantee and attribute all payments in to the unsecured balance<sup>9</sup>.

So long as an account is unbroken, a surety ought not to be prejudiced by any departure from the rule of appropriation of items in order of date, unless he has expressly consented to such departure, or his consent may be implied from the character of his engagement<sup>10</sup>.

867. Combination of accounts; banker's right of set-off.

Unless precluded by agreement, express or implied from the course of business, the banker is entitled to combine accounts kept by the customer in his own right, even though at different branches of the same bank, and to treat the balance, if any, as the only amount really standing to his credit<sup>1</sup>; but the banker may not arbitrarily combine a current account with a loan account<sup>2</sup>. An agreement not to combine ceases to be effective as soon as the relationship of banker and customer comes to an end<sup>3</sup>. The customer, however, has not the equivalent right, and cannot utilise a credit balance at one branch for the purpose of drawing cheques on another branch where his account is overdrawn<sup>4</sup>. In the absence of agreement or course of business, and either by right of lien or set-off, the banker may retain enough on an account in credit to satisfy a debit on another kept in the same right<sup>5</sup>.

Where accounts are maintained in different names so that the requirement of mutuality is prima facie lacking, there may be available an equitable set-off<sup>1</sup> when a credit balance is really and truly the property of one person, in the name of another, who is indebted to the bank on some other account<sup>2</sup>. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(iv) Appropriation of Payments; Combining Accounts; Third Party Debt Orders/869. Third party debt orders.

869. Third party debt orders.

The Civil Procedure Rules contain rules which provide for a judgment creditor to obtain an order for the payment to him of money which a third party who is within the jurisdiction owes to the judgment debtor<sup>1</sup>. Third party debt orders were formerly known as garnishee orders.

On the application of a judgment creditor, the court may make a final third party debt order requiring a third party to pay to the judgment creditor: (1) the amount of any debt due or accruing due to the judgment debtor from the third party; or (2) so much of that debt as is sufficient to satisfy the judgment debt and the judgment creditor's costs of the application<sup>2</sup>. The court must first make an interim third party debt order to fix a hearing to consider whether to make a final third party debt order and may direct that until that hearing the third party must not make any payment which reduces the amount he owes the judgment debtor to less than the amount specified in the order<sup>3</sup>.

A bank or building society<sup>4</sup> served with an interim third party debt order must carry out a search to identify all accounts held with it by the judgment debtor<sup>5</sup>. The bank or building society must disclose to the court and the creditor within seven days of being served with the order, in respect of each account held by the judgment debtor: (a) the number of the account; (b) whether the account is in credit; (c) if the account is in credit: (i) whether the balance of the account is sufficient to cover the amount specified in the order; (ii) the amount of the balance at the date it was served with the order, if it is less than the amount specified in the order; and (iii) whether the bank or building society asserts any right to money in the account, whether pursuant to a right of set-off or otherwise, and if so giving details of the grounds for that assertion<sup>6</sup>. If the judgment debtor does not hold an account with the bank or building society or the bank or building society is unable to comply with the order for any other reason<sup>7</sup>, the bank or building society must inform the court and the judgment creditor of that fact within seven days of being served with the order<sup>8</sup>.

If the judgment debtor is an individual and he is prevented from withdrawing money from his account with a bank or building society as a result of an interim third party debt order, and he or his family is suffering hardship in meeting ordinary living expenses as a result, the court may, on an application by the judgment debtor, make an order permitting the bank or building society to make a payment or payments out of the account (a 'hardship payment order')<sup>9</sup>. A hardship payment order may permit the third party to make one or more payments out of the account and specify to whom the payments may be made<sup>10</sup>.

If the judgment debtor or the third party objects to the court making a final third party debt order, he must file and serve written evidence stating the grounds for his objections<sup>11</sup>. If the judgment debtor or the third party knows or believes that a person other than the judgment debtor has any claim to the money specified in the interim order, he must file and serve written evidence stating his knowledge of that matter<sup>12</sup>. If the third party has given notice that he does not owe any money to the judgment debtor or that the amount which he owes is less than the amount specified in the interim order, and the judgment creditor wishes to dispute this, the judgment creditor must file and serve written evidence setting out the grounds on which he disputes the third party's case<sup>13</sup>.

At the hearing the court may: (A) make a final third party debt order; (B) discharge the interim third party debt order and dismiss the application; (C) decide any issues between the parties and any other person who has a claim to the money specified in the interim order; (D) direct a trial of any such issues and if necessary give directions<sup>14</sup>.

A final third party debt order is enforceable as an order to pay money<sup>15</sup>. If the third party pays money to the judgment creditor in compliance with a third party debt order, or the order is enforced against him, the third party, to the extent of the amount paid or realised by enforcement, is discharged from his debt to the judgment debtor<sup>16</sup>. This applies even if the third party debt order, or the original judgment or order against the judgment debtor, is later set aside<sup>17</sup>. It appears that a bank which receives a third party debt order will not incur liability to the creditor in tort if it negligently released the funds to the debtor himself, although it would obviously be guilty of contempt of court if it flouted the order deliberately<sup>18</sup>.

870. Deposit accounts and withdrawable share accounts subject to third party debt orders.

In deciding whether, for the purposes of the jurisdiction of the High Court to make third party debt orders, a sum standing to the credit of a person in any deposit account or any withdrawable share account with a deposit taker<sup>1</sup> is a sum due or accruing<sup>2</sup> to that person and, as such, may be made subject to a third party debt order<sup>3</sup>, the following conditions are to be disregarded: (1) any condition applying to the account that a receipt for money deposited in the account must be produced before any money is withdrawn; (2) any condition that notice is required before any money or share is withdrawn; (3) any condition that a personal application must be made before any money or share is withdrawn; (4) any condition that a deposit book or share account book must be produced before any money or share is withdrawn; or (5) any other prescribed condition<sup>4</sup>.

The Lord Chancellor may by order<sup>5</sup> make such provision as he thinks fit for all or any of the following purposes: (a) including in, or excluding from, the accounts to which the provisions described above apply accounts of any description specified in the order; (b) excluding from the accounts to which those provisions apply all accounts with any particular specified deposit taker or with any deposit taker of a specified description<sup>6</sup>.

1 For the purposes of the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 40, 'deposit taker' means a person who may, in the course of his business, lawfully accept deposits in the United Kingdom: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 40(6) (substituted by SI 2001/3649). As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 2 note 3. The Supreme Court Act 1981 s 40(6) must be read with the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 s 22, any relevant order under that provision, and Sch 2 (see PARA 84): Supreme Court Act 1981 s 40(7) (added by SI 2001/3649). 871. Foreign currency subject to third party debt orders.

A sum standing to the credit of a judgment debtor in a foreign currency may be made the subject of a third party debt order<sup>1</sup> in accordance with the following procedure:

- 14 (1) so soon as reasonably practicable after the time of service of the interim third party debt order, the bank must ascertain, at its then normal buying rate of exchange against sterling, the amount of the foreign currency balance of the judgment debtor that would, if converted at that rate, produce an amount equal to the sterling judgment debt and costs, and that amount of foreign currency as ascertained must be made subject to the order;
- 15 (2) so soon as reasonably practicable after service of the final third party debt order, the bank must purchase, at its then normal buying rate of exchange against sterling, the amount of the foreign currency, or so much as will by the application of that rate produce the sterling judgment debt and costs, and pay it into court or to the judgment creditor;
- 16 (3) in order that the final third party debt order should express the obligation of the bank under the procedure described above, the bank should inform the court of the amount of foreign currency and the rate of exchange used by the bank; and, when the order is made final, it should order the bank to pay the sterling equivalent of the foreign currency or the amount of the judgment debt and costs, whichever be the lesser<sup>2</sup>.

872. Drawing against deposit account.

It is doubtful whether valid cheques may be drawn against a deposit account at call<sup>1</sup>. Bankers may, however, honour such cheques, relying on a right of set-off against the money on deposit<sup>2</sup>. The position may be different where a course of business has been established.

1 The view expressed by Malins V-C in favour of their validity in Hopkins v Abbott (1875) LR 19 Eq 222 at 228 and Stein v Ritherdon (1868) 37 LJ Ch 369 seems inconsistent with the reasoning in Re Head, Head v Head (No 2) [1894] 2 Ch 236, CA, and finds no support in the summary of the banker's obligations given by Atkin LJ in Joachimson v Swiss Bank Corp [1921] 3 KB 110 at 127, CA. ## (v) Statement of Account

873. Bank statements as evidence.

Entries in statements of account to the credit of the customer are, when delivered to him, prima facie evidence against the banker; if such a statement is returned by the customer without objection, entries to his debit are prima facie evidence against him<sup>1</sup>.

Where credits appear by mistake in the statement, and the customer alters his position in reliance on them, the bank cannot afterwards debit the account with the amount<sup>2</sup>; but, in the absence of any change of position, credits mistakenly entered may be rectified within a reasonable time<sup>3</sup>. However, a bank would not be permitted to retain money paid in, but omitted to be credited, even if the customer had not noticed its omission from his bank statement.

Where a bank stamps a paying-in slip counterfoil, it bears the onus of showing that a different sum was actually received from that acknowledged on the counterfoil<sup>4</sup>.

1 For a consideration of the history of the pass-book, the predecessor to the bank statement, see Devaynes v Noble, Baring v Noble (1816) 1 Mer 529 at 535-536; Commercial Bank of Scotland v Rhind 1860 3 Macq 643. There would seem to be no reason why the law relating to pass-books should not apply equally to bank statements, but there is no authority to this effect. As to the admissibility of entries in a banker's books as evidence, including entries produced by computers, see PARA 908.

874. Effect of periodic statement.

If a bank wishes to impose upon a customer an express obligation to examine periodic bank statements and to make those statements, in the absence of query, unchallengeable by the customer after expiry of a time limit, the burden of objection and of the sanction imposed must be brought home to the customer<sup>1</sup>. The test is undoubtedly rigorous, and is not satisfied by a contractual provision that statements are to be confirmed, and that, if not confirmed within a specified time, they may be taken by the banker as approved by the customer<sup>2</sup>. A fortiori, in the absence of such an obligation, the returning of a bank statement without objection does not give rise to a settled account by which both are bound<sup>3</sup>, even where the customer, upon receipt of periodic bank statements, returns a signed confirmation slip<sup>4</sup>.

(vi) Banker as Bailee

875. Property deposited for safe custody.

Unless the undertaking of the care of valuable property<sup>1</sup> when required is made a condition of opening an account or offered as an inducement to do so, the position of the banker as regards any property deposited with him for custody is probably that of a bailee for value<sup>2</sup>. In default of agreement to the contrary, the bailment will be determinable at the will of the bailor<sup>3</sup>. The bailee will be bound to take the same care of the property entrusted to him as a reasonably prudent and careful person may fairly be expected to take of his own property of the like description<sup>4</sup>. It is submitted that this involves the employment of all the facilities at the banker's command<sup>5</sup>; and, in view of the facilities usually existing, the question whether the banker is a gratuitous bailee or a bailee for value does not seem material<sup>6</sup>. The banker's knowledge or ignorance of the nature of the goods entrusted to him does not appear to affect the question of his liability<sup>7</sup>. If, however, the customer misleads the banker as to the nature or value of the goods, he would presumably not be entitled to hold the banker to a greater degree of care or to a larger compensation than was consistent with his own representations. An acknowledgment that the goods are received 'for safe custody' does not increase the liability of the banker<sup>8</sup>.

The bank is liable for loss caused by the negligence or criminal act of members of its own staff<sup>9</sup> carried out in the scope of their employment<sup>10</sup>.

If goods are brought to a bank for safe custody at the place to which they are brought, the bank may be liable for their loss if removed elsewhere<sup>11</sup>.

1 In Isaacs v Barclays Bank Ltd and Barclays Bank (France) Ltd [1943] 2 All ER 682, the question arose, but was not decided, whether the demand for the return of securities held for safe custody must be made at the branch at which they were deposited.

In the case of documents, the bank may be compelled to deliver them up: see R v Daye [1908] 2 KB 333. As to the standard of care required of bailees see Houghland v RR Low (Luxury Coaches) Ltd [1962] 1 QB 694 at 698, [1962] 2 All ER 159 at 161, CA, per Ormerod LJ. See further BAILMENT vol 3(1) (2005 Reissue) PARA 39.

5 It seems that the utilisation of available means of securing safety must be part of the care a reasonable person would take.

6 A bailee for value is bound to adopt at his own expense all reasonable safeguards. A gratuitous bailee is bound to do his best with what he has got, using the best facilities at his command, but not more. A banker invariably has safes, strong-rooms etc. Cf Queensland National Bank Ltd v P & O Steam Navigation Co [1898] 1 QB 567, CA; and see the dicta of Ormerod LJ in Houghland v RR Low (Luxury Coaches) Ltd [1962] 1 QB 694 at 698, [1962] 2 All ER 159 at 161, CA. See further BAILMENT vol 3(1) (2005 Reissue) PARA 39.

7 The rule as stated was laid down in Giblin v McMullen (1868) LR 2 PC 317, without qualification as to knowledge. The facts in that case appear to point to ignorance on the part of the banker as to the nature of the goods. The presumption is that they are valuable.

876. Delivery to wrong person.

Where the bank delivers the goods to the wrong person, and in consequence they are lost to the owner, the liability of the bank is absolute, though there is no element of negligence<sup>1</sup>. In law the banker could contract out of this liability, but he would be unlikely to do so in practice.

If the banker has suspicions as to the identity or authority of the person requiring delivery of the valuables or the genuineness of any written order produced by that person, the banker may retain the goods for a reasonable time in order to satisfy himself on these points, or, it is submitted, may decline to deliver them to the applicant, stating that he would himself send them to the owner, and doing so within a reasonable time<sup>2</sup>.

1 The case is one of wrongful conversion of the goods, and the bank is liable for this wrongful conversion, apart from any question of negligence. This view is supported by the following authorities: Youl v Harbottle (1791) Peake 68; Stephenson v Hart (1828) 4 Bing 476 at 482 per Park J ('from the cases which have been cited it is clear that trover lies against a carrier for misfeasance in delivering a parcel to a wrong person'), and at 488 per Gaselee J ('for delivery to a wrong person a carrier is no doubt responsible in trover'); M'Kean v M'Ivor (1870) LR 6 Exch 36 at 41 per Bramwell B ('I assume that a misdelivery would have been a conversion'); Hiort v London and North Western Rly Co (1879) 4 ExD 188, CA, per Bramwell LJ; Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co v East and West India Dock Co (1880) 6 QBD 475 at 493, CA, per Bramwell LJ (affd (1882) 7 App Cas 591, HL); Bristol and West of England Bank v Midland Rly Co [1891] 2 QB 653 at 657, CA, per Lopes LJ ('delivery to a wrong person would be conversion').

The cases of Stephenson v Hart above, Duff v Budd (1822) 3 Brod & Bing 177, and Heugh v London and North Western Rly Co (1870) LR 5 Exch 51, which have been supposed to support the contrary contention, are distinguishable on the ground that in each of them there had been a refusal to accept the goods or a failure to discover the consignee; the bailee was therefore in the position of an involuntary bailee, who has the implied authority of the real owner to deal with the goods in any reasonable manner, and is therefore liable only for negligence. Those cases were explained and distinguished on this ground by Bramwell LJ in Hiort v Bott (1874) LR 9 Exch 86 at 90.

2 Such retention would not be conversion, as it involves no disregard of or interference with the owner's title: cf Hollins v Fowler (1875) LR 7 HL 757 at 766 per Blackburn J; and Clayton v Le Roy [1911] 2 KB 1031, CA.

877. Removal.

A banker who receives goods for custody at his bank is not justified in removing them elsewhere for safe keeping, and may be liable for any loss occurring while they were deposited elsewhere<sup>1</sup>.

If some of a number of similar items deposited with a bank are inadvertently sold by the bank and damages for conversion are awarded against it, the title to the goods sold vests in the bank<sup>2</sup>.

878. Securities held for a foreign bank.

If bonds are held in London to the order of a foreign bank for the account of a foreign national, there is no contractual relationship between him and the English bank<sup>1</sup>. If by the proper law of the bailment of the bonds to the foreign bank the bailor is not entitled to delivery of the bonds, the English bank, as bailee of the foreign bank, will not be compelled to deliver them up<sup>2</sup>. Similarly, if the delivery of the bonds would involve the foreign bank in doing an act abroad which was illegal<sup>3</sup> there, the English courts will not enforce delivery by a London branch of that bank<sup>4</sup>.

A cheque is a bill of exchange drawn on a banker, payable on demand<sup>1</sup>. A bearer cheque is one expressed to be payable to a particular person or bearer<sup>2</sup>, or to bearer; or a cheque on which the only or last indorsement is in blank<sup>3</sup>. An order cheque is one which is expressed to be so payable, or which is expressed to be payable to a particular person or body and does not contain words prohibiting transfer or indicating an intention that it should not be transferable<sup>4</sup>. A cheque payable to the order of a particular person, and not to him or his order, is nevertheless payable to him or his order at his option<sup>5</sup>. A cheque may be crossed either generally<sup>6</sup> or specially<sup>7</sup>.

A warrant given by the Registrar of Government Stock for making any payment on the exchange of government securities<sup>8</sup> is deemed to be a cheque<sup>9</sup> and is exempt from stamp duty<sup>10</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/880. Crossing of cheques.

880. Crossing of cheques.

The rules for the negotiation of bills and notes apply generally to cheques<sup>1</sup>, with this addition, that the negotiation of a cheque may be affected by 'crossing' it. This is done by drawing two parallel transverse lines across the face of the cheque. If the lines are drawn simply, or if the words 'and company' or any abbreviation are written within them, with or without the addition in either case of the words 'not negotiable', the cheque is said to be crossed generally; and in that case a holder who desires to receive payment of the cheque must present it through a banker<sup>2</sup>. However it should be noted that cheques are usually pre-printed with an 'account payee' or 'a/c payee' crossing with the result that the cheque is not transferable (and hence not negotiable): such an instrument is valid only as between the parties to it<sup>3</sup>.

If within the transverse lines there is written the name of a banker, with or without the words 'not negotiable', the cheque is said to be crossed specially, and to the banker named; and in that case a holder who desires to receive payment of the cheque must present it through that banker<sup>4</sup>.

The drawer of a cheque may, if he wishes, cross it either generally or specially<sup>5</sup>. The holder may: (1) if the cheque is uncrossed, cross it either generally or specially; (2) if the cheque is crossed generally, add the name of a banker so as to convert the general crossing into a special one; and (3) in either case, add the words 'not negotiable'<sup>6</sup>.

A banker: (a) to whom a cheque is crossed specially may cross it specially to another banker for collection; or (b) to whom a cheque that is uncrossed or crossed generally is sent for collection may cross it specially to himself<sup>7</sup>.

It is unclear whether a cheque made payable to 'order' may be made non-transferable: National Bank v Silke [1891] 1 QB 435, CA. The judgments in this case have been read as implying that the 'not negotiable' crossing prohibited transfer. Such is clearly not the case: cf the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 81, which limits negotiability, not transferability (see PARA 838); Great Western Rly Co v London and County Banking Co Ltd [1901] AC 414, HL.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/881. Duties of a collecting banker.

881. Duties of a collecting banker.

In collecting cheques and other instruments for a customer<sup>1</sup>, a banker acts basically as a mere agent or conduit to receive payment of the cheques from the banker on whom they are drawn and to hold the proceeds at the disposal of his customer<sup>2</sup>.

The character in which a banker receives a cheque is a matter of fact in each case: he may be a mere collecting agent, or he may take as a holder for value or in due course<sup>3</sup>.

As agent for collection he is bound to exercise diligence in the presentation of the cheque for payment. He fulfils his duty if, when the cheque is drawn on a bank in the same place, he presents it the day after receipt<sup>4</sup>, or, when it is drawn on a bank in another place, he either presents it or forwards it on the day following receipt<sup>5</sup>. The forwarding may be to another branch or to an agent of the bank<sup>6</sup>, who has the same time after receipt in which to present. A non-clearing bank may so utilise a clearing bank; but in any case the bank which has received the cheque from its customer remains liable to him for default of its agent<sup>7</sup>. Where presentation is made through the inter-bank clearing system, the presenting bank's responsibility to its customer in respect of the collection of the cheque is discharged only when the cheque is physically delivered to that branch of the paying bank for decision whether it should be paid or not<sup>8</sup>. Presentation by post is sufficient<sup>9</sup>; and it would appear that, when a bank forwards a cheque by post to the bank on which it is drawn, the latter receives it as agent for presentment to itself<sup>10</sup>, and in that capacity may hold it till the day after receipt.

Where a cheque drawn by one customer of a bank is received from another customer, it is a question of fact whether it was presented for payment or paid in for collection. If the latter, the bank has the usual time of an agent for giving notice of dishonour<sup>11</sup>, but must pay in preference to a debt due to itself from the drawing customer<sup>12</sup>.

If a banker fails to present a cheque within a reasonable time after it reaches him, he is liable to his customer for loss arising from the delay<sup>13</sup>. The indorsers, if any, are discharged if presentation is not made within reasonable time after indorsement<sup>14</sup>. Where a cheque is not presented within a reasonable time of its issue, the drawer is discharged to the extent of any actual damage he may have suffered by the failure to pay of the bank on which the cheque was drawn<sup>15</sup>.

A banker receiving instruments delivered to him for collection and credit to a customer's account may collect solely for the customer or for himself or both. Where he collects for the customer, he may be liable in conversion if his customer has no title but, provided that he collects in good faith and without negligence, he may plead statutory protection<sup>16</sup>; the cause of action is conversion or money had and received and entails ultimately choosing between a claim based on the tort and a claim based on an implied contract<sup>17</sup>. If the banker collects for himself, he needs no such protection unless the instrument is affected by forgery<sup>18</sup>. He can be both an agent for collection and a holder for value at the same time<sup>19</sup>.

1 As to the customer see PARA 883.

2 Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240, HL. A bank receiving a cheque from an individual to purchase shares or return it does not owe a duty of care to the bank against which the cheque is drawn not to lose it: Yorkshire Bank plc v Lloyds Bank plc [1999] 2 All ER (Comm) 153. It appears that a collecting bank does not owe a general duty of care to parties other than its customers: see Box v Barclays Bank plc [1998] 18 LS Gaz R 33, [1998] Lloyd's Rep Bank 185.

881 Duties of a collecting banker

NOTE 3--See Grosvenor Casinos Ltd v National Bank of Abu Dhabi [2008] EWHC 511 (Comm), [2008] 2 All ER (Comm) 112 (where the Uniform Rules of Collection between a remitting bank and collecting bank are intended to reflect and support the highly structured and formalised manner of collection between banks).

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/882. Protection of collecting banker.

882. Protection of collecting banker.

Where a banker in good faith and without negligence<sup>1</sup> receives payment for a customer<sup>2</sup> of a cheque and the customer has no title or a defective title to the cheque, the banker does not incur any liability to the true owner of the cheque by reason only of having received such payment<sup>3</sup>. The banker is not to be treated<sup>4</sup> as having been negligent by reason only of his failure to concern himself with absence of, or irregularity in, indorsement of the cheque or other instrument<sup>5</sup>.

Where this statutory protection attaches, it covers the receipt of the cheque and every step taken in the ordinary course of business and intended to lead up to the receipt of payment<sup>6</sup>, such as stamping the bank identification stamp on the cheque. It has been suggested<sup>7</sup> that the protection did not extend to cheques obtained by 'larceny or analogous felony'<sup>8</sup>, but it is submitted that this suggestion is unfounded<sup>9</sup>.

1 See PARA 884.

2 See PARA 883.

3 Cheques Act 1957 s 4(1)(a), (2)(a). See also PARA 1411. This includes cheques which under the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 81A(1) (see PARA 895) or otherwise are not transferable: Cheques Act 1957 s 4(2)(a) (amended by the Cheques Act 1992 s 3). A banker who, having credited his customer's account with the amount of a cheque, receives payment of it for himself, has the same protection as a banker who receives payment for a customer: Cheques Act 1957 s 4(1)(b), (2)(a). Section 4 applies not only to cheques, but also to: (1) any document issued by a banker's customer which, though not a bill of exchange, is intended to enable a person to obtain payment from that banker of the sum mentioned in the document (see s 4(2)(b); and PARAS 898, 900-901); (2) any document issued by a public officer which is intended to enable a person to obtain payment from the Paymaster General or the Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer of the sum mentioned in the document but which is not a bill of exchange (see s 4(2)(c); and PARA 898 note 5); and (3) any draft payable on demand drawn by a banker upon himself, whether payable at the head office or at some other office of his bank (see s 4(2)(d); and PARA 896). As to the Paymaster General and the Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 714; COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARA 654. See Honourable Society of the Middle Temple v Lloyds Bank plc [1999] 1 All ER (Comm) 193.

A bank may be entitled to the protection of the Cheques Act 1957 s 4 even though the payee was a different entity from the account holder, so long as there appears to be a significant match: see Architects of Wine Ltd v Barclays Bank plc [2007] EWCA Civ 239, [2007] 2 All ER (Comm) 285.

4 le for the purposes of the Cheques Act 1957 s 4.

5 Cheques Act 1957 s 4(3). 'Instrument' refers to any instrument specified in s 4(2): see the text and note 3.

6 Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240 at 244, HL, per Lord Macnaghten. This view is not seriously affected by the dictum in Taxation Comrs v English Scottish and Australian Bank Ltd [1920] AC 683 at 688, PC.

7 Dicta of Lord Halsbury and Lord Brampton in Great Western Rly Co v London and County Banking Co Ltd [1901] AC 414, HL, have been taken to imply this.

8 The offence of larceny is replaced by that of theft: see the Theft Act 1968 ss 1, 33(3), Sch 3; and CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 282. The distinction between felony and misdemeanour was removed by the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 1: see CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 49.

9 The customer cannot have less than no title, the contingency against which the banker is protected under the Cheques Act 1957 s 4 (replacing the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 82 (repealed)).

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/883. Receipt for customer.

883. Receipt for customer.

To entitle the banker to protection he must receive payment for a customer<sup>1</sup>, but he may receive payment for himself and yet be entitled to the protection where, acting in a purely collecting capacity, he has nevertheless a lien or is otherwise a holder for value<sup>2</sup>. It seems that, in order to be a customer, a person need not have habitual dealings with the banker in the nature of ordinary banking business and that an isolated transaction may be enough to create the relationship of banker and customer<sup>3</sup>, but the continued cashing of crossed cheques over the counter from which the bank derives no direct benefit does not constitute such a relationship<sup>4</sup>.

The existence of a current account creates the relationship of banker and customer between the bank and the owner of the account<sup>5</sup>, as does the existence of a deposit account<sup>6</sup>. However, the banker may be entitled to the statutory protection before the account is opened provided that it is intended that the account should be opened after the normal preliminaries have been completed<sup>7</sup>.

It will probably be enough to create the relationship of banker and customer if the customer habitually discounts bills at the bank. A first transaction, such as the payment in of a cheque to open an account, is protected<sup>8</sup>. If a person is not a customer, his drawing a counter cheque, or the entry of the transaction in the banker's books under such a heading as 'Sundry Customers', is of no avail<sup>9</sup>. A person is a customer although his account is overdrawn<sup>10</sup>. One bank may be a customer of another bank<sup>11</sup>.

Where a crossed cheque drawn on one office of a bank is paid in by a customer at another branch, and is credited in his account, the bank is protected both as a collecting and as a paying bank<sup>12</sup>. This is so also where the cheque is paid in for the credit of an account at the branch where the drawer's account is kept, though in order to avoid liability the bank must bring itself within both the protection afforded to a collecting bank and that afforded to a paying bank<sup>13</sup>.

1 Cheques Act 1957 s 4(1)(a). See also PARA 1002. The protection conferred by s 4 (see PARA 882) is conferred on a banker who receives payment for a customer, that is, who receives payment as an agent for collection; the bank should be 'a mere conduit pipe for conveying the cheque to the bank on which it is drawn and receiving the money from that bank for their customer': Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240 at 245-246, HL, per Lord Macnaghten. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/884. Acting in good faith and without negligence.

884. Acting in good faith and without negligence.

If the collecting banker wishes to plead the statutory protection, his dealings throughout must be in good faith and without negligence<sup>1</sup>. Negligence in this connection is breach of a duty to the possible true owner, not the customer, created by the statute itself, the duty being not to disregard the interests of the true owner<sup>2</sup>. The test of negligence is whether the transaction of paying in any given cheque coupled with the circumstances antecedent and present is so out of the ordinary course that it ought to arouse doubts in the banker's mind and cause him to make inquiries<sup>3</sup>. In discharging his contractual duties in crediting an account with a dividend, a banker is not obliged to consider the tax implications of the matter<sup>4</sup>. He is bound to make inquiries when there is anything to raise suspicion that the cheque is being wrongfully dealt with in being paid into the customer's account<sup>5</sup>, but is not called upon to be abnormally suspicious<sup>6</sup>.

Disregard of the bank's own regulations may be evidence of negligence<sup>7</sup>; and the production of a certificate under the Registration of Business Names Act 1916 (now the Business Names Act 1985)<sup>8</sup> has been held sufficient to satisfy a banker put on inquiry<sup>9</sup>.

A bank is not liable for acts of negligence if these are induced or encouraged by the conduct of the true owner<sup>10</sup>. The banker cannot adduce pressure of exigencies of business or shortage of staff to modify what, in ordinary circumstances, would be negligence<sup>11</sup>, but he may plead contributory negligence on the part of the customer in mitigation of damages<sup>12</sup>.

A banker's failure to concern himself with the absence of, or an irregularity in, indorsement does not, by itself, constitute negligence<sup>13</sup>.

It may be negligent not to make inquiries as to a customer upon opening an account and collecting a cheque for him<sup>14</sup>. Unless the reference obtained in respect of a customer renders it superfluous, inquiry ought to be made concerning the character and circumstances of the customer<sup>15</sup>.

Fluctuations in the account may be a circumstance putting the bank upon inquiry<sup>16</sup>.

1 See the Cheques Act 1957 s 4(1). As to the statutory protection see PARA 882. Section 4(1) specifically mentions only the receipt of the money, but negligence in taking the cheque has always been held to preclude protection as necessarily involving the subsequent receipt. ### 885. When proceeds available.

Where cheques are collected, the banker has a reasonable time, consistent with ordinary book-keeping, in which to pass the proceeds to current account before they are available for drawing against<sup>1</sup>. Where cheques are credited as cash prior to receipt of payment, the customer is entitled to draw on them at once only if there is an agreement, express or implied, to that effect<sup>2</sup>. If a cheque received for collection is dishonoured, or if the banker has to account to the true owner for the proceeds<sup>3</sup>, the banker is entitled to debit the customer's account accordingly<sup>4</sup>.

886. Duties consequent upon dishonour.

If a cheque is dishonoured on presentation, the collecting banker may debit the customer's account with the amount<sup>1</sup>. He must give due notice of dishonour<sup>2</sup> either to the parties liable on the cheque, or to his principal, the customer<sup>3</sup>. The usual course is to return the cheque to the customer, and this is deemed sufficient notice of dishonour<sup>4</sup>. Branches of the same bank are held to be separate persons for the transmission of notice of dishonour<sup>5</sup>.

Where a cheque drawn by one customer of a bank is paid in for collection by another customer, and there are not sufficient funds to meet it, the banker still has until the next day in which to return it<sup>6</sup>.

1 This is the universal custom of bankers, apparently recognised by Lord Lindley in Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240 at 248, HL. See also Re Mills, Bawtree & Co, ex p Stannard (1893) 10 Morr 193.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/887. Duties and liabilities of banker collecting bills.

887. Duties and liabilities of banker collecting bills.

If a banker undertakes the collection of bills<sup>1</sup> for a customer, he is bound to present them for acceptance and payment in accordance with the provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882<sup>2</sup>, and must give notice of dishonour to his customer if they are dishonoured<sup>3</sup>. Where collection is undertaken at the customer's risk, under an agreement relieving the bank from all liability, the banker will be exempt from liability for the negligence of his agent<sup>4</sup>. If the banker employs a sub-agent for collection, he is responsible to the customer for negligence on the part of the sub-agent<sup>5</sup>, but has a remedy against the sub-agent.

A banker who collects a bill to which his customer has no title is liable to the true owner in conversion or for money had and received to the face value of the bill, and has no statutory protection whatever<sup>6</sup>.

Money received on a bill by a sub-agent is in law received by the banker, apart from any question of account between him and the sub-agent<sup>7</sup>. A banker receiving bills for collection from another banker is agent for the remitting banker, not for that banker's customer; unless, therefore, the banker has distinct notice that the bills are the property of the customer, they may be treated as the property of the remitting banker<sup>8</sup>, and are subject to a lien for any balance due from the latter<sup>9</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/888. Negotiation of bills by banker.

888. Negotiation of bills by banker.

A banker is not justified in negotiating bills, whether indorsed by the customer or not, which have been paid in for collection<sup>1</sup>, at any rate unless the state of the customer's account renders it a reasonable thing to do so<sup>2</sup>. Since 'account payee' cheques are no longer transferable in any event<sup>3</sup> issues of this kind will not now arise in practice.

2 Negotiation in some such circumstances is clearly contemplated in Thompson v Giles (1824) 2 B & C 422: see at 429 per Bayley J ('the banker could only be justified in negotiating them when that was rendered a reasonable course by the state of the customer's account'); see also at 432 per Holroyd J. Cf Re Harrison, ex p Barkworth (1858) 2 De G & J 194. It is submitted, however, that the right arises only when there has been agreement, express or implied, that the bills may be so dealt with on contingencies which have arisen. The proper course is to hold and collect the bills when due and retain the proceeds by virtue of set-off. See also PARA 864.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/889. Defective title of customer.

889. Defective title of customer.

If the customer for whom a banker collects has no title, or a defective title, prima facie the banker is liable to the true owner<sup>1</sup> for conversion or for money had and received to the face value of the cheque<sup>2</sup>; but if in collecting he acts in good faith and without negligence, he may claim statutory protection<sup>3</sup>. There is no difference in this respect between crossed and uncrossed cheques<sup>4</sup>. If the banker cannot establish the statutory protection, the damages may be reduced where the true owner also has been negligent<sup>5</sup>. Where, however, conversion will not lie, as where the collection has been for a customer having a revocable title unrevoked at the time the money was received and handed over, the banker will be protected as an innocent agent who has parted with the money to his principal before notice<sup>6</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/890. Bank as holder for value.

890. Bank as holder for value.

A banker who is asked by a customer to collect a cheque and who, pursuant to a contract express or implied to do so, credits the customer forthwith with the amount of the cheque before the proceeds are received, in fact receives the sum for himself and not for the customer<sup>1</sup>; but he has the same statutory protection in such circumstances as if he had received payment of the cheque for the customer<sup>2</sup>. Where there is no question of a forged indorsement or of the 'not negotiable' or 'account payee' crossings, the banker may, in the case of both crossed and uncrossed cheques, escape liability for conversion if he can establish an independent title as holder in due course<sup>3</sup>. Every holder is deemed to be a holder in due course; but if the instrument is shown to be affected by fraud, a banker dealing with it must show that he gave value in good faith subsequent to the fraud<sup>4</sup>. The status of holder for value may be claimed by the bank in the following circumstances: where cash has been given for the cheque over the counter; where the cheque is paid in in reduction of an overdraft<sup>5</sup>; where the cheque is paid in on the footing that it may be at once drawn against<sup>6</sup>, whether in fact it is drawn against or not<sup>7</sup>; or where the cheque is subject to a lien<sup>8</sup>. The mere existence of an overdraft, though the banker's lien in respect of it makes him a holder for value to the extent of that lien<sup>9</sup>, would not preclude the statutory protection<sup>10</sup>.

Where, by any of the above methods, the banker becomes holder in due course of a cheque paid in, he has all the rights of such a holder, including that of suing the parties to it in his own name<sup>11</sup>.

The banker may perhaps also escape liability if he can show that the proceeds of the cheque have in fact reached the hands of the true owner, or been applied for his benefit<sup>12</sup>.

Prior to the passing of the Cheques Act 1957, the absence of an indorsement was fatal to any claim to be holding for value or in due course, for the possessor was no holder at all<sup>13</sup> unless the cheque was drawn payable to bearer. The Cheques Act 1957 did away with the necessity for indorsement. A banker who gives value for, or has a lien on, a cheque payable to order which the holder delivers to him for collection without indorsing it has such, if any, rights as he would have had if, upon delivery, the holder had indorsed the cheque in blank<sup>14</sup>. A banker taking such a cheque is the holder of it<sup>15</sup> and, if the requisite conditions are present, a holder for value or in due course. It is not essential that the cheque be credited to the account of the holder<sup>16</sup>.

1 This is so because, by crediting the customer with the money before receiving it, the bank has become a holder for value: see Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240 at 245, HL, per Lord Macnaghten ('It is impossible, I think, to say that a banker is merely receiving payment for his customer and a mere agent for collection when he receives payment of a cheque of which he is the holder for value'). See also note 10. The conditions for becoming a holder for value in these circumstances are explained by Atkin LJ in AL Underwood Ltd v Barclays Bank [1924] 1 KB 775 at 805-806, CA. Cf Westminster Bank Ltd v Zang [1966] AC 182, [1966] 1 All ER 114, HL.

5 London and County Banking Co v Groome (1881) 8 QBD 288. Valuable consideration for a bill may be constituted by: (1) any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract; or (2) an antecedent debt or liability: Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 27(1). See also PARA 1479. Such a debt or liability must be the liability of the promisor or drawer of the bill and not that of a stranger: Hasan v Willson [1977] 1 Lloyd's Rep 431.

6 National Bank v Silke [1891] 1 QB 435 at 439, CA, per Bowen LJ. It does not appear essential that the cheque should actually be drawn against before clearance: see the cases cited in PARA 891 note 2. In Westminster Bank Ltd v Zang [1966] AC 182, [1966] 1 All ER 114, HL, the bank had reserved, on its paying-in slips, the right to refuse payment against uncleared effects, and this was held to preclude there being any implied agreement that the customer could draw against uncleared effects.

10 Clarke v London and County Banking Co [1897] 1 QB 552. The banker might be said to have waived his lien on the cheque, presented it on behalf of the customer, and retained the proceeds by virtue of his right of set-off. As to set-off see PARAS 868, 1012. Cf Great Western Ry Co v London and County Banking Co Ltd [1900] 2 QB 464 at 476, CA, per Romer LJ (reversed on appeal [1901] AC 414, HL, but without overruling Clarke v London and County Banking Co above). The courts gradually rescued the collecting banker from the apparent conflict indicated in Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240 at 245, HL, per Lord Macnaghten (see note 1). It is now accepted that a collecting banker may collect for a customer and plead the protection of the Cheques Act 1957 s 4 (see PARA 882), even though the bank is a holder in due course of the cheque or a holder for value to the extent of his lien: see Re Keever, ex p Cork v Midland Bank Ltd [1966] 2 Lloyd's Rep 475; Barclays Bank Ltd v Astley Industrial Trust Ltd [1970] 2 QB 527, [1970] 1 All ER 719.

14 See the Cheques Act 1957 s 2. An undorsed cheque which appears to have been paid by the banker on whom it is drawn is evidence of the receipt by the payee of the sum payable by the cheque: s 3(1) (renumbered by SI 1996/2993). For these purposes, a copy of such a cheque is evidence of the cheque if: (1) the copy is made by the banker in whose possession the cheque is after presentment; and (2) it is certified by him to be a true copy of the original: Cheques Act 1957 s 3(2) (added by SI 1996/2993).

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/891. Crediting as cash.

891. Crediting as cash.

The mere fact that the banker has credited the cheque in his customer's account before receiving the proceeds does not deprive him of protection against the true owner in the event of his customer having no title, or a defective title, to the cheque<sup>1</sup>. Crediting the customer's account does not of itself alter the position of the banker from that of agent for collection to that of holder for value. It is a question of fact in each case. In order to constitute the banker a holder for value on this ground there must be a contract, express or implied, that the customer should be entitled to draw against the amount of the cheque before it is cleared<sup>2</sup>.

If the banker becomes a holder for value, he may, in the absence of a forged indorsement and unless the cheque is crossed 'not negotiable' or 'account payee', sue upon a cheque in his own name as a holder in due course<sup>3</sup>, and may debit the customer if the cheque is dishonoured<sup>4</sup>. He may apparently plead that he is a holder for value as against the person claiming as true owner, except where the indorsement is forged or the cheque is marked 'not negotiable' or 'account payee'.

1 See the Cheques Act 1957 s 4(1); and PARA 882. This provision replaces the combined effect of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 82 and the Bills of Exchange (Crossed Cheques) Act 1906, the latter of which was passed in consequence of the decision in Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240, HL (see note 2; and PARA 890 note 1). It would seem that a banker who was a mere agent for collection was always within the protection of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 82 (repealed): see the judgments of Bigham J in Akrokerri (Atlantic) Mines Ltd v Economic Bank [1904] 2 KB 465, and Channell J in Bevan v National Bank Ltd (1906) 23 TLR 65. It may be that the protection extends to a banker who has become a holder in due course: see Sutters v Briggs [1922] 1 AC 1 at 15, HL, per Lord Birkenhead LC; Re Keever, ex p Cork v Midland Bank Ltd [1966] 2 Lloyd's Rep 475; Barclays Bank Ltd v Astley Industrial Trust Ltd [1970] 2 QB 527, [1970] 1 All ER 719. A contract between the banker and the customer that the banker will, before receipt of the proceeds of the cheques, honour cheques of the customer drawn against the cheques paid in is enough to constitute the banker a holder for value: see AL Underwood Ltd v Bank of Liverpool and Martin's [1924] 1 KB 775 at 805, CA per Atkin LJ; Westminster Bank Ltd v Zang [1966] AC 182, [1966] 1 All ER 114, HL.

These cases explain the meaning of the judgment in Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240, HL. A banker who is an agent for collection has been held to be a 'holder' within the meaning of the Gaming Act 1835 s 2 (repealed): Sutters v Briggs [1922] 1 AC 1, HL. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/892. Per pro indorsement.

892. Per pro indorsement.

A per pro indorsement<sup>1</sup> puts the collecting banker on inquiry as to the authority of the person making it, and disregard of this intimation is a matter for consideration in determining the question of negligence, but not where the instrument so indorsed is paid in for the credit of the claimant's account<sup>2</sup>. Failure to inquire as to the authority of the signatory will not, of itself, constitute negligence<sup>3</sup>. The inquiry must include not only the authority to indorse, but the authority to deal with the indorsed cheque in the manner proposed<sup>4</sup>. The principle is not limited to signatures 'per pro'. Any cheque purporting to be indorsed in a representative capacity stands on the same footing<sup>5</sup>. Where the indorsement is authorised, the banker is not affected by the existence of unfulfilled conditions<sup>6</sup>; and where the indorsement and application are authorised, he is not liable for misapplication of the proceeds in the absence of any ground of suspicion<sup>7</sup>.

1 A per pro signature is a signature by procuration (per procuracionem); it operates as notice that the agent has only a limited authority to sign: Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 25. See also PARA 1474.

893. Cheques payable to officials.

Any indication that the customer is using for his own benefit a document prima facie created for the benefit of, and being the property of, another person with whom he stands in fiduciary relationship should put the banker on inquiry<sup>1</sup>. Under this head would come cheques payable to secretaries of companies or charitable institutions, and the like, in their official capacities, and cheques payable to a partnership and indorsed by one partner paying in to his private account<sup>2</sup>. It would ordinarily be negligent for a banker to take such cheques without inquiry for private account. It would perhaps be negligence to take for the private account of one executor a cheque payable to executors as such<sup>3</sup>. It has been held that the fact that cheques paid in by a stockbroker may possibly represent money of his clients in his hands does not necessarily put a banker on inquiry<sup>4</sup>.

It is equally negligence where the information which should put the bank on inquiry is divided between two offices of the same bank, as where a cheque is paid into one branch to the credit of an account at another<sup>5</sup>.

1 Hannan's Lake View Central Ltd v Armstrong & Co (1900) 16 TLR 236 (where the secretary of a company indorsed a cheque payable to the company and paid it into a private account); Ross v London County, Westminster and Parr's Bank Ltd [1919] 1 KB 678; Souchette Ltd v London County, Westminster and Parr's Bank Ltd (1920) 36 TLR 195; AL Underwood Ltd v Bank of Liverpool and Martin's [1924] 1 KB 775, CA; Lloyds Bank Ltd v Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China [1929] 1 KB 40, CA; Slingsby v District Bank Ltd [1932] 1 KB 544, CA; Motor Traders Guarantee Corp Ltd v Midland Bank Ltd [1937] 4 All ER 90; Marquess of Bute v Barclays Bank Ltd [1955] 1 QB 202, [1954] 3 All ER 365. Statutory protection is given to banks in relation to solicitors' client accounts: see PARA 826.

2 Bevan v National Bank Ltd (1906) 23 TLR 65. The position may be different from that of a partner drawing on a partnership account and paying into a private account: see Backhouse v Charlton (1878) 8 ChD 444. The suggestion was repudiated by Mackinnon J in London and Montrose Shipbuilding and Repairing Co Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd (1926) 31 Com Cas 67 (affd 31 Com Cas 182, CA) that a bank was put on inquiry where it collected for the indorsee a cheque payable to a limited company and indorsed over to that indorsee.

3 Cf, however, Shields v Bank of Ireland [1901] 1 IR 222 (where the court appears to have seen nothing irregular in an executor paying executorship money into his private account).

5 Lloyds Bank Ltd v EB Savory & Co [1933] AC 201, HL. However, in Lipkin Gorman v Karpnale Ltd [1992] 4 All ER 409, [1989] 1 WLR 1340, CA, the customer's expert witness agreed that if a number of different cashiers handle a particular account, it would be impossible for any one cashier to build up a reliable indication of what the ordinary pattern of transactions on that account was.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/894. 'Not negotiable'.

894. 'Not negotiable'.

It has been suggested that the fact that a cheque is crossed 'not negotiable' of itself puts the banker on inquiry<sup>1</sup>; but it is submitted that such is not the case<sup>2</sup>.

Where a cheque is crossed 'not negotiable', the banker cannot avail himself of the defence that he dealt with the cheque pending revocation of a voidable title in the customer<sup>3</sup>.

1 Great Western Ry Co v London and County Banking Co Ltd [1901] AC 414 at 422, HL, per Lord Brampton; and see Morison v London, County and Westminster Bank Ltd [1914] 3 KB 356 at 373, CA, per Lord Reading CJ. Cf Bevan v National Bank Ltd (1906) 23 TLR 65 at 67 per Channell J.

2 These words being merely part of the crossing, negligence in respect of a crossed cheque must be something outside the crossing. This particular crossing being for the protection of the public, the banker is entitled to correlative protection. In Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240, HL, Lord Brampton's view (see note 1) was either not pressed or not adopted. Cf that case in the Court of Appeal sub nom Gordon v Capital and Counties Bank Ltd [1902] 1 KB 242 at 275 and Crumplin v London Joint Stock Bank Ltd (1913) 109 LT 856 (where a banker taking a 'not negotiable' cheque without making inquiries was held not guilty of negligence). In Smith and Baldwin v Barclays Bank Ltd (1944) 5 Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers 370, Stable J held that an instrument in the form of a cheque, crossed 'not negotiable' and over the crossing 'please pay cash', was none the less a crossed cheque, and that the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 82 could be pleaded. Section 82 has been repealed and replaced by the Cheques Act 1957 s 4 which applies to uncrossed as well as crossed cheques: see s 4, s 6(3), Schedule (repealed); and PARA 882.

3 As to this defence in the case of other cheques see Tate v Wilts and Dorset Bank (1899) 1 Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers 286. However, see the doubt cast upon this case by Sankey LJ in Lloyds Bank Ltd v Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China [1929] 1 KB 40 at 68, CA. As to the exclusion of the defence by non-negotiable crossing cf Great Western Ry Co v London and County Banking Co Ltd [1901] AC 414, HL.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/895. 'Account payee'.

895. 'Account payee'.

Where a cheque is crossed and bears across its face the words 'account payee' or 'a/c payee', either with or without the word 'only', the cheque is not transferable, but is only valid as between the parties to it<sup>1</sup>. A banker is not to be treated<sup>2</sup> as having been negligent by reason only of his failure to concern himself with any purported indorsement of a cheque which is not transferable<sup>3</sup>.

Where a bank acts as agent for collection for a foreign bank of a cheque crossed 'account payee', the test<sup>4</sup> is whether there was anything in the circumstances which was noticed or which ought to have been noticed; if so, the bank is on inquiry and may not be able to discharge its onus of proving the absence of negligence<sup>5</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/896. Drafts drawn by bank on itself.

896. Drafts drawn by bank on itself.

Drafts payable on demand drawn by a branch office on the head office of the same bank, or vice versa, are not cheques<sup>1</sup>, not being drawn by one person on another<sup>2</sup>, but the crossed cheques provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882<sup>3</sup> apply to the drafts as if they were cheques<sup>4</sup>. Such a draft is one payable on demand and drawn by or on behalf of a bank upon itself, whether payable at the head office or some other office of the bank<sup>5</sup>. It is presumably negotiable<sup>6</sup>. It is also 'a draft or order drawn upon a banker' within the Stamp Act 1853<sup>7</sup>, and, if payable to order on demand, the issuing banker is protected if he pays in good faith, notwithstanding that the indorsement is forged or unauthorised<sup>8</sup>. Payment operates as a discharge<sup>9</sup>. A banker receiving payment in circumstances amounting to conversion is liable to the true owner<sup>10</sup> for the face value unless he can bring himself within the protection of the Cheques Act 1957<sup>11</sup>. A paying bank is protected if it has paid such drafts on a forged indorsement where they are payable to order on demand<sup>12</sup>, whether the draft be inland or foreign<sup>13</sup>, or if it is paying in good faith and in the ordinary course of business in the absence of an indorsement or on an irregular indorsement<sup>14</sup>.

Drafts between two branches or between a branch and head office of the same bank may not be issued payable to bearer on demand<sup>15</sup>.

Drafts of the above nature payable to order on demand may be crossed<sup>16</sup>. The protection against forged indorsements, in respect of uncrossed drafts, would generally be sufficient for the paying bank<sup>17</sup>.

If such a draft bearing a crossing is presented for payment across the counter, the banker may refuse to pay it<sup>18</sup>, but the holder may sue the bank either as drawer of a bill or maker of a promissory note<sup>19</sup>.

4 Cheques Act 1957 s 5 (replacing the Bills of Exchange Act (1882) Amendment Act 1932). The Cheques Act 1957 ss 1, 4 apply to banker's drafts: see ss 1(2)(b), 4(2)(d); note 14; and PARA 882. See also PARA 1411.

5 See the Cheques Act 1957 ss 1(2)(b), 4(2)(d). The meaning of 'banker's draft' was formerly explicitly set out in the Bills of Exchange Act (1882) Amendment Act 1932 (repealed by the Cheques Act 1957 Schedule).

12 Stamp Act 1853 s 19; Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240, HL.

13 It has been contended that the Stamp Act 1853 s 19 can apply only to inland drafts, but the enactment, though in the form of a proviso, is general in its terms. The fact that it is a proviso does not prevent its being a substantive enactment: Matthiessen v London and County Bank (1879) 5 CPD 7. The Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 139 (repealed), referred to the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 60 (which gives a similar protection to bankers in the case of drafts or orders which are bills of exchange or cheques), as relating to 'the indorsement of drafts or orders drawn upon bankers for the payment of money', without specifying inland drafts. In Brown Brough & Co v National Bank of India Ltd (1902) 18 TLR 669, Bigham J clearly thought the Stamp Act 1853 s 19 applied to foreign drafts, and his ruling was not dissented from by the House of Lords in Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240.

14 See the Cheques Act 1957 s 1(2), by which, where a banker, in good faith and in the ordinary course of business, pays a draft payable on demand drawn by him upon himself, whether payable at the head office or some other office of his bank, he does not, in doing so, incur any liability by reason only of the absence of or irregularity in indorsement, and the payment discharges the instrument. ### 897. Drafts drawn by one bank on another.

Drafts drawn by one bank on another are normally merely cheques, and may in all respects be dealt with as such<sup>1</sup>.

1 See PARA 879 et seq. As to drafts drawn by a bank on itself see PARA 896.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/898. Orders for payment.

898. Orders for payment.

An order for payment drawn by a customer on his banker payable conditionally<sup>1</sup> on the payee's signing a special attached receipt is not a cheque<sup>2</sup>; nor is an instrument in the form of a cheque which is drawn in favour of 'cash' or 'wages' or other impersonal payee<sup>3</sup>.

Such documents are not negotiable<sup>4</sup>; but they are documents issued by a customer which, though not bills of exchange, are intended to enable a person to obtain payment from the banker of the sum mentioned in them<sup>5</sup>.

The crossing on such documents has generally been regarded as affording both collecting and paying bankers the same protection as the crossing on cheques, and as imposing the same duties on the latter<sup>6</sup>. If the collecting banker has received the amount payable under any of such documents in circumstances constituting conversion of the document, he is liable to the true owner for the face value<sup>7</sup>, unless he can bring himself within the protection of the Cheques Act 1957<sup>8</sup>.

It would seem not to be regarded as negligence in a banker to take these documents for collection for a party other than the named payee<sup>9</sup>. Beyond this, their transferability would seem doubtful. Nor is a banker negligent in collecting by reason only of his failure to concern himself with absence of, or irregularity in, indorsement of an instrument<sup>10</sup>. As these documents are capable of being effectively crossed<sup>11</sup>, the banker paying in good faith and without negligence, and in accordance with the crossing, would be protected<sup>12</sup>.

Where a banker in good faith and in the ordinary course of business pays a document issued by his customer which, though not a bill of exchange, is intended to enable a person to obtain payment from him of the sum mentioned in the document, he does not, in doing so, incur any liability by reason only of the absence of, or irregularity in, indorsement, and the payment discharges the instrument<sup>13</sup>. Forgery of indorsement is probably irrelevant except in cases in which the banker has demanded an indorsement as a pre-requisite to payment<sup>14</sup>. The signature to a receipt is probably not an indorsement and, where the receipt is not signed by the payee, the banker has paid away his customer's money without authority, and cannot debit him.

Where documents are made payable by the banker<sup>15</sup> conditionally on presentation within a limited time<sup>16</sup>, it is a matter of doubt whether the banker is protected if he pays them on a forged indorsement.

It is usual for bankers to take indemnities from customers with regard to paying these documents, which, not being cheques, they are under no primary obligation to honour.

1 To disqualify the instrument from being a cheque, the condition must be a condition between drawer and banker, and not merely between drawer and payee: Roberts & Co v Marsh [1915] 1 KB 42, CA. Cf PARA 899.

899. Cheques with receipt attached.

To conform with the definition in the Bills of Exchange Act 1882<sup>1</sup>, a cheque which a banker is bound to honour, must be an unconditional order in writing<sup>2</sup>. By a narrow but appreciable distinction, however, a condition, such as the signing of a receipt, imposed by the instrument on the holder and not addressed to the banker, that is, the drawee, does not destroy its character as a cheque<sup>3</sup>. Nevertheless a banker would probably refuse to pay such a document unless the receipt was duly signed<sup>4</sup>. Signature to the receipt is probably not an indorsement<sup>5</sup>, and it would seem that such signature would not give the banker protection under the Bills of Exchange Act 1882<sup>6</sup> if it proved to be a forgery. In other respects such instruments may be dealt with in the same manner as cheques.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(vii) Collection of Cheques etc; Protection and Duties of Collecting Banker/900. Dividend warrants.

900. Dividend warrants.

A banker's duties, liabilities and protection with regard to dividend warrants, which are strictly in cheque form, are the same as they are with regard to other cheques. For example, dividend warrants, payment of which is made conditional on signature and production of an annexed receipt or on presentation within a specified period<sup>1</sup>, are not cheques<sup>2</sup>, but they are treated in the same category as cheques vis-à-vis the banker paying or collecting if they are documents issued by a customer which, though not bills of exchange, are intended to enable a person to obtain payment from that banker of the sum mentioned in them<sup>3</sup>.

The rules as to presentation and notice of dishonour applicable to cheques are not binding in the case of those dividend warrants which are not cheques. It is, however, the duty of the banker to present them in reasonable time and return them to the customer if not paid on presentation.

The crossed cheques provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882<sup>4</sup> apply to dividend warrants<sup>5</sup>, if they are within the category laid down in the Cheques Act 1957<sup>6</sup>.

A forged indorsement or a 'not negotiable' or 'account payee' crossing precludes the banker from setting up an independent title<sup>7</sup>. Whether he may do so in other cases, or is justified in taking dividend warrants for collection from anyone other than the payee, depends on the negotiability of a dividend warrant, which has never been judicially recognised<sup>8</sup>. Where the amount of a dividend warrant has been received in circumstances constituting conversion of the document, the damages recoverable by the true owner would be the face value, independent of any question of negotiability<sup>9</sup>.

Possibly a custom of merchants could be proved at the present day making dividend warrants negotiable if payable to bearer or order. The Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 97(3)(d) (which saves the validity of any usage relating to dividend warrants or their indorsement) is not sufficient to confer negotiability. See also PARA 1619.

901. Interest warrants.

The crossed cheques provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882<sup>1</sup> were held to apply to warrants for the payment of interest on 3½ per cent War Loan<sup>2</sup>. The decision goes no further, and ordinary interest warrants (for example, for the payment of interest on debenture stock) drawn by a customer on a banker are either cheques or orders on a banker issued by the customer<sup>3</sup>.

1 The Bills of Exchange Act 1882 ss 76-81 and the Cheques Act 1957 s 4(1) (replacing the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 82): see PARA 880. The crossed cheques provisions apply to interest warrants by virtue of the Cheques Act 1957 s 5. See also notes 2-3.

2 See Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 95 (which extends the crossed cheques provisions to warrants for the payment of 'dividend'). See also Slingsby v Westminster Bank Ltd [1931] 1 KB 173, in which it was held that a warrant for interest on 5 per cent War Stock 1929-47 was a dividend warrant within the meaning of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 95 and also a cheque. See also PARA 1619. The stock was regulated by special legislation whereby payments on this security were designated 'dividends'. Warrants paying savings bank annuities sent by post are deemed to be cheques within the meaning of any enactment relating to cheques: see the Government Annuities Act 1929 s 59(1), (2). Certain regulations expressly provide that the crossed cheques provisions apply to warrants issued under the regulations as if the warrants were cheques: see eg the Savings Certificates Regulations 1991, SI 1991/1031, reg 7(2); and the Premium Savings Bonds Regulations 1972, SI 1972/765, reg 8(2).

3 As to orders on bankers issued by the customer see the Cheques Act 1957 ss 1(2)(a), 4(2)(b); and PARAS 882, 898. Whether the provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 ss 95, 97(3)(d) (see PARA 900) extend to warrants for the payment of fixed interest or are confined to dividend warrants strictly so termed is uncertain. In practice, interest warrants, whether cheques or not, are often treated in the same manner as dividend warrants; and in any event, both paying and collecting bankers are protected by the Cheques Act 1957 ss 1(2)(a), 4(2)(b): see PARA 882.

902. Travellers' cheques.

Travellers' cheques, used to enable travellers to obtain money abroad, take many forms; in appearance they resemble cheques, but they may not have the essential attributes of a cheque. Some are drawn by the issuing banker, others by the person to whom they are issued, the place for the name of the payee in most cases being left blank. The grantee is required to sign them as soon as they are issued to him, and it is a condition of payment by the payer who fills in his own name as payee, that the grantee signs again in the presence of the payer so that the latter may compare the grantee's signature. The legal nature of any type of travellers' cheques has not been considered in any reported case in England<sup>1</sup>.

Where a contract contains an express term obliging a bank to refund the value of lost or stolen travellers' cheques, neither the fact of recklessness or of want of care by the purchaser, nor the bank's belief in their existence, constitutes grounds for refusing to make the refunds<sup>2</sup>.

1 In Emerson v American Express Co 90 A 2d 236 (1950), the Municipal Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia held that, when countersigned, travellers' cheques of the defendant company were fully negotiable; that the lack of a named payee did not render them incomplete in the hands of a subsequent holder for value; and that the beneficiary in countersigning other than in the presence of the paying agents was in breach of his contract with the issuers.

903. Cheque guarantee cards.

A cheque guarantee card is a card issued by a bank to its customer for use in conjunction with cheques drawn by him. The issuing bank undertakes<sup>1</sup> to the payee that payment of the drawer's cheques will be honoured subject to the fulfilment of specified conditions.

The conditions are normally that:

- 17 (1) the cheque is in settlement of one transaction only not exceeding the specified limit;
- 18 (2) the cheque is drawn on one of the bank's forms bearing the code number appearing on the cheque guarantee card;
- 19 (3) the cheque is dated before the date on which the cheque guarantee card expires;
- 20 (4) the cheque is signed in the presence of the payee, the drawer's signature corresponding with that on the cheque guarantee card;
- 21 (5) the number of the card is written on the back of the drawer's cheque by the payee.

On issuing the card, the issuing bank stipulates that the customer may not countermand payment of a cheque drawn in conjunction with the card<sup>2</sup>.

1 'By exhibiting to the payee a cheque card containing the undertaking by the bank to honour cheques drawn in compliance with the conditions indorsed on the back, and drawing the cheque accordingly, the drawer represents to the payee that he has actual authority from the bank to make a contract with the payee on the bank's behalf that it will honour the cheque on presentment for payment': Metropolitan Police Comr v Charles [1977] AC 177 at 182, [1977] 3 All ER 112 at 114, HL, per Lord Diplock. The description 'cheque guarantee card' is a misnomer as the obligation assumed by the bank is not a secondary obligation dependent on default by the customer tendering the card but a separate and independent obligation: First Sport Ltd v Barclays Bank plc [1993] 3 All ER 789 at 795, [1993] 1 WLR 1229 at 1236, CA, per Evans LJ.

2 'The obligation undertaken by the bank to the supplier, which it enters into through the agency of its customer when he uses the bank card, is not to dishonour the cheque on presentation for want of funds in the account, so that it is obliged if necessary to advance moneys to the customer to meet it': Re Charge Card Services Ltd [1987] Ch 150 at 166, [1986] 3 All ER 289 at 301 per Millett J; on appeal: [1989] Ch 497, [1988] 3 All ER 702, CA. #### 904. Credit cards and charge cards.

The normal features of credit card and charge card transactions<sup>1</sup> are:

- 22 (1) there is an underlying contractual scheme which pre-dates the individual contracts of sale whereby the supplier agrees to accept the credit card in payment of the price of the goods bought, and the purchaser is entitled to use the credit card to commit the card company to pay the supplier;
- 23 (2) the underlying scheme is established by two separate contracts, namely: (a) a contract between the card company and the seller, whereby the seller agrees to accept payment by use of the card from anyone holding the card and the card company agrees to pay to the supplier the price of the goods supplied less a discount; and (b) a contract between the card company and the card holder, whereby the card holder is provided with a card enabling him to pay the price by its use in return for agreeing to pay the card company the full amount of the price charged by the supplier;
- 24 (3) the underlying scheme is designed primarily for use in over-the-counter sales, that is to say sales where the only connection between a particular seller and a particular buyer is one sale;
- 25 (4) the actual sale and purchase of the commodity is the subject of a third bilateral contract made between the buyer and seller; in the majority of cases this sale contract will be an oral, over-the-counter sale, and tendering and acceptance of the credit card in payment is made on the tacit assumption that the legal consequences will be regulated by the separate underlying contractual obligations between the seller and the card company and the buyer and the card company;
- 26 (5) the card does not carry the address of the card holder and the supplier will have no record of his address; therefore the seller has no obvious means of tracing the purchaser save through the card company<sup>2</sup>.

Credit cards have come to be regarded as substitutes for cash; they are frequently referred to as 'plastic money'<sup>3</sup>.

A card scheme provides advantages to both seller and buyer: the seller is able to attract custom by agreeing to accept credit card payment; and the buyer, by using the card, minimises the need to carry cash and obtains at least a period of free credit during the period until payment to the card company is due<sup>4</sup>.

1 The practical difference between a credit card and a charge card is that a credit card agreement normally entitles the card holder to extended credit, subject to repayment of a minimum amount specified in the statement of account, whereas a charge card agreement normally requires the card holder to pay the total amount within a specified period. As to the prohibition of restrictive agreements in the supply of credit card services see the Credit Cards (Merchant Acquisition) Order 1990, SI 1990/2158 (amended by SI 2000/2031); and the Credit Cards (Price Discrimination) Order 1990, SI 1990/2159 (amended by SI 2000/2031). See also the Price Indications (Method of Payment) Regulations 1991, SI 1991/199, which set out requirements for the indication of prices of certain goods where different prices are charged for payment by different methods.

905. Payment by credit card or charge card.

There is no general principle of law that, whenever a method of payment is adopted which involves a risk of non-payment by a third party, there is a presumption that the acceptance of payment through a third party is conditional upon the third party making the payment, and that, if he does not pay, the original obligation of the purchaser remains<sup>1</sup>.

Whether the seller's acceptance of payment by a credit card or charge card is conditional or absolute payment depends on the terms of the agreement between the parties, and, in the absence of express agreement, the correct approach in such a case is that the court should seek to infer from the parties' conduct and the surrounding circumstances what is the fair term to imply<sup>2</sup>.

The following factors, if present, point clearly to a conclusion that, subject to any special features of a particular card scheme, payment by card is unconditional payment of the price:

- 27 (1) the card holder's knowledge that, if he signs a voucher, the seller will be entitled to receive payment which would discharge his liability for the price;
- 28 (2) the card holder's knowledge that the card-issuing company will deduct commission in paying the seller;
- 29 (3) the seller's knowledge that, on signing the voucher, the card holder renders himself liable to the card company to pay to it the price;
- 30 (4) the underlying assumption of the buyer and seller in entering into their respective contracts with the card company before entering into the contract of sale that, on completion of a sale, the parties' future rights and obligations will be regulated by those underlying contracts;
- 31 (5) the fact that the seller has no record of the address of the customer and no ready means of tracing him<sup>3</sup>.

The following additional factors, if present, point the same way:

- 32 (a) the existence of a guarantee of the card company's obligations to the seller;
- 33 (b) the fact, if neither the seller nor the buyer envisages that the buyer/card holder will have to pay twice (once to the seller and once to the card company), that, under the terms of the agreement between the card holder and the card company, the card holder may be required to pay the card company even though the card company has not paid the seller<sup>4</sup>.

A conclusion that payment by card is absolute accords with the popular perception of the role of credit cards in modern retail trade as 'plastic money'<sup>5</sup>.

Whether payment by the use of a cheque guarantee card<sup>6</sup> is to be analysed in the same way as payment by credit card or charge card is undecided<sup>7</sup>.

1 Re Charge Card Services Ltd [1989] Ch 497 at 511-512, [1988] 3 All ER 702 at 707, CA, per Sir Nicolas Browne-Wilkinson V-C.

6 Where a buyer uses a cheque guarantee card, the obligation undertaken by the bank to the supplier, which it enters into through the agency of its customer when he uses the card, is not to dishonour the cheque, if drawn for a sum less than a specified amount, for want of funds in the account: see Re Charge Card Services Ltd [1987] Ch 150 at 166, [1986] 3 All ER 289 at 301; on appeal [1989] Ch 497, [1988] 3 All ER 702, CA. 7 In Re Charge Card Services Ltd [1987] Ch 150 at 166, [1986] 3 All ER 289 at 301-302, Millett J stated obiter that the presumption that the giving of a cheque operates as a conditional payment only would not be displaced merely by the fact that the cheque is accompanied by a bank card; on appeal [1989] Ch 497 at 517, [1988] 3 All ER 702 at 711, CA, per Sir Nicolas Browne-Wilkinson V-C, this point was expressly left open.

906. Electronic funds transfer.

Payment by electronic funds transfer (EFT) is now very common, although there is no universally accepted legal definition<sup>1</sup>. There are two categories of EFT systems: (1) non-consumer activated systems<sup>2</sup>; and (2) consumer activated systems<sup>3</sup>. The main consumer activated systems are automated teller machines (ATMs) and electronic funds transfer at point of sale (EFTPOS). A customer may use an ATM to obtain cash, check an account balance, request a statement or make a deposit<sup>4</sup>. EFTPOS allows payment to be made for goods and services by the electronic transfer of funds from the customer's account to the supplier's account<sup>5</sup>.

There is no statutory regime in the United Kingdom governing the electronic transfer of funds and instead the general law of contract and agency must be invoked<sup>6</sup>. Banks and building societies have a code of conduct set out in the Banking Code (1 March 2005) and the Business

Banking Code (1 March 2005), covering matters such as the issue of cards and personal identification numbers, security of cards, lost or stolen cards and customer complaints; but compliance with this is voluntary<sup>7</sup>.

Cross-border credit transfers within the European Economic Area are, subject to various conditions, governed by regulations<sup>8</sup>. The provision of cross-border payment services will be subjected to further regulation when the EU Payment Services Directive is implemented towards the end of 2009<sup>9</sup>.

1 In the United States, the Electronic Fund Transfer Act 1978 defines EFT as 'any transfer of funds, other than a transaction originated by check, draft, or similar paper instrument, which is initiated through an electronic terminal, telephonic instrument, or computer or magnetic tape so as to order, instruct, or authorise a financial institution to debit or credit an account'. Cf the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) which defines EFT as 'a funds transfer in which one or more of the steps in the process that were previously done by paper-based techniques are now done by electronic techniques': see UNCITRAL, Legal Guide on Electronic Funds Transfers (1987, United Nations, New York). For a full discussion of electronic funds transfer see Paget's Law of Banking (12th Edn, 2003) ch 17. In particular see R v Preddy [1996] AC 815, [1996] 3 All ER 481, HL; R v Williams [2001] 1 Cr App Rep 362, [2001] Crim LR 253, [2000] All ER (D) 1393, CA.

2 Non-consumer activated systems are those in which the bank selects and activates the system, eg the Clearing House Automated Payments System (CHAPS).

3 Consumer activated systems are those in which the consumer selects and activates the system, eg cash-dispensers, automated teller machines, tele-shopping and home banking.

4 To obtain access to an ATM, the bank's customer is issued with a plastic card with a magnetic strip, together with a four-digit personal identification number (PIN). The card must be inserted into the ATM, and the PIN must be entered. Once the PIN has been verified, the customer may select the function he requires and the card is returned to him on completion.

5 In the case of a retail sale, the customer presents the seller with a plastic EFTPOS debit card which has information relating to the customer's bank account encoded in a magnetic stripe on the back. The usual practice has been for the seller to swipe the card through a card reader and enter the amount. A voucher is issued for the customer to sign and the seller checks that this corresponds with the signature on the back of the card. The signature acts as the customer's mandate to his bank to debit his account and credit the seller's account and a message to this effect is transmitted via an EFTPOS network to the customer's bank and the seller's bank. A new system, known as 'chip and PIN', has been introduced, which enables the customer to enter his PIN number onto a pad instead of signing a voucher. As to the use of credit cards see PARA 904.

6 See AGENCY; CONTRACT. Principles of tort, restitution, property law, equity and criminal law may also be relevant.

7 The banks and building societies must also conform to the requirements of the Consumer Credit Act 1974, the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999, SI 1999/2083: see CONSUMER CREDIT; CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 820 et seq. As to the extent to which the courts may take cognisance of the Banking codes see Barclays Bank plc v O'Brien [1994] 1 AC 180, [1993] 4 All ER 417, HL. At the date at which this volume states the law, there is website setting out the Banking Code and supplying other relevant information: see www.bankingcode.org.uk.

8 See the Cross-Border Credit Transfers Regulations 1999, SI 1999/1876 (amended by SI 2000/2952, SI 2002/765, SI 2003/2066, SI 2003/3075; SI 2007/108). The regulations lay down certain standard conditions for cross-border credit transfers not exceeding 50,000 euros or its equivalent in another currency of a state within the EEA. A cross-border credit transfer is defined as a transaction or series of transactions carried out as a result of instructions given directly to an institution in one EEA state, the purpose of which is to make available to the ultimate recipient of the funds transferred at an institution in another EEA state an amount in euros or another currency of an EEA state. The regulations (1) set out the minimum information which must be made available to the actual and prospective customers of an institution which participates in the carrying out of cross-border credit transfers, and which must be given by an institution to customers on whose behalf it has carried out such a transfer; (2) enable a customer to seek undertakings regarding the time it will take to carry out a transfer and the charges to be made in connection therewith; (3) lay down maximum periods for the carrying out of a transfer, where there is no time limit agreed between a customer and the institution, and for payment of compensation where a transfer is completed late; (4) make provision regarding charging for transfers; and (5) make provision for the recovery of sums deducted from the amount transferred in contravention of the customer's instructions.

9 The proposed directive introduces the concept of a 'payment institution', which will be authorised to participate in the payments business but will not be permitted to accept deposits: see further PARA 1399.

907. Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879.

The statutory privileges offered by the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879<sup>1</sup> extend to banks and bankers within the meaning of the Act, that is: (1) deposit takers<sup>2</sup>; and (2) the National Savings Bank<sup>3</sup>. The Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 does not apply to the Bank of England<sup>4</sup>, except in so far as it is applied to the Bank for particular purposes.

The provisions of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 apply for the purpose of proving any entry in the stock registers as if the Registrar were a bank and a banker<sup>5</sup>, and as if such entry or, where the information recorded in the register is not in readable form and is later transcribed into readable form, the transcribed version of such an entry, were an entry in a banker's book<sup>6</sup>.

1 See PARA 908.

2 'Deposit taker' means: (1) a person who has permission under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 Pt IV (ss 40-55) (see PARA 348 et seq) to accept deposits; or (2) an EEA firm of the kind mentioned in Sch 3 para 5(b) which has permission under Sch 3 para 15 (as a result of qualifying for authorisation under Sch 3 para 12(1)) to accept deposits or other repayable funds from the public (see PARA 315): Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 s 9(1A) (s 9(1A)-(1C) added by SI 2001/3649). A person is not a deposit-taker if he has permission to accept deposits only for the purpose of carrying on another regulated activity in accordance with that permission: Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 s 9(1B) (as so added). The provisions of s 9(1A), (1B) must be read with the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 s 22, any relevant order under that provision, and Sch 2 (see PARA 84 et seq): Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 s 9(1C) (as so added).

3 Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 s 9(1) (substituted by the Banking Act 1979 Sch 6 Pt I para 1; and amended by the Trustee Savings Banks Act 1985 Sch 4; SI 2001/1149; and SI 2001/3649). As to the National Savings Bank see PARA 810 et seq.

6 Government Stock Regulations 2004, SI 2004/1611, reg 7(7). See PARA 807. Expressions in the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 relating to 'bankers' books' include ledgers, day books, cash books, account books and other records used in the ordinary business of the bank, whether those records are in written form or are kept on microfilm, magnetic tape or any other form of mechanical or electronic data retrieval mechanism: s 9(2) (substituted by the Banking Act 1979 Sch 6 Pt I para 1). The words 'other records' in the Bankers' Books

Evidence Act 1879 must be construed ejusdem generis with 'ledgers, day books, cash books and account books'; assorted bundles of cheques and paying-in slips are not 'other records' within the meaning of the Act: Williams v Williams [1988] QB 161 at 168, [1987] 3 All ER 257 at 261, CA, per Sir John Donaldson MR. The expression 'used in the ordinary business' does not mean that the books must be in use every day; it is sufficient if the banker keeps a book to refer to if necessary: Idiots' Asylum v Handysides (1906) 22 TLR 573, CA. As to the inspection of documents not forming part of a banker's books see Re Howglen Ltd [2001] 1 All ER 376.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(ix) Bankers' Books; Production in Evidence, Inspection, etc/908. Copies of entries as evidence.

908. Copies of entries as evidence.

In all legal proceedings<sup>1</sup>, a copy of any entry in a banker's books<sup>2</sup> is to be received as prima facie evidence of such entry<sup>3</sup>, and of the matters, transactions and accounts recorded in it<sup>4</sup>. A copy of an entry in a banker's books may not, however, be so received in evidence unless it is first proved that the book was at the time of the making of the entry one of the ordinary books of the bank, that the entry was made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that the book is in the custody or control of the bank<sup>5</sup>, or of the successors to the bank in whose custody or control it was when the entry was made<sup>6</sup>; and such proof may be given by a partner or officer of the bank, and may be given orally or by an affidavit sworn before any commissioner or person authorised to take affidavits<sup>7</sup>. It must also be proved that the copy has been examined with the original entry and is correct; and such proof must be given by some person who has examined the copy with the original entry, and may likewise be given either orally or by an affidavit<sup>8</sup>.

Although cheques and paying-in slips constitute part of a bank's records used in the ordinary course of its business, the adding of an individual cheque or paying-in slip to a bundle of cheques or paying-in slips does not constitute the making of an entry in those records<sup>9</sup>. A microfilm recording the payment of cheques by photographing the name of the payee appears to be an entry in a banker's books within the meaning of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879<sup>10</sup>.

A letter from a banker to his customer is not a banker's book<sup>11</sup>.

1 'Legal proceeding' for this purpose means any civil or criminal proceeding or inquiry in which evidence is or may be given, and includes: (1) an arbitration (see generally ARBITRATION vol 2 (2008) PARA 1201 et seq); (2) an application to, or an inquiry or other proceeding before, the Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal (see LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 66 (2009) PARA 907); and (3) an investigation, consideration or determination of a complaint by a member of the panel of ombudsmen for the purposes of the ombudsman scheme within the meaning of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (see PARA 575 et seq): Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 s 10 (definition amended by SI 2001/3649). As to the application of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 in service disciplinary proceedings and standing civilian courts see ARMED FORCES vol 2(2) (Reissue) PARA 487.

2 As to the meaning of 'bankers' books' see PARA 907 note 6.

3 Entries in bankers' books under the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 are prima facie evidence against the world: London and Westminster Bank v Button (1907) 51 Sol Jo 466. The Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 makes copies of such entries evidence against anyone; thus the entries in a defendant's bankers' books are made evidence against the claimant: see Harding v Williams (1880) 14 ChD 197.

4 Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 s 3. Whether the non-existence of any entry in the material books is prima facie evidence of the non-existence of an account is undecided: see Douglas v Lloyds Bank Ltd (1929) 34 Com Cas 263.

909. Production of originals.

No banker or officer of a bank<sup>1</sup>, in any legal proceeding<sup>2</sup> to which the bank is not a party, may be compelled to produce any banker's book<sup>3</sup> the contents of which can be proved<sup>4</sup>, or to appear as a witness to prove the matters, transactions and accounts recorded in it, unless by order of a judge made for special cause<sup>5</sup>.

However, to obtain the benefit of this relief from attendance and production, the banker or officer must have furnished, or have been willing to furnish, verified copies of the required entries; and, if he has not done so, the books may still be obtained by order of the court<sup>6</sup>.

A bank which is a party to litigation is under the ordinary duty to give disclosure of relevant documents and to allow inspection<sup>7</sup>.

(x) Secrecy, References and Advice*910. Obligation of secrecy.

It is an implied term of the contract between a banker and his customer that the banker will not divulge to third persons, without the express or implied consent of the customer, either the state of the customer's account, or any of his transactions with the bank or any information relating to the customer acquired through the keeping of his account, unless the banker is compelled to do so by order of a court, or the circumstances give rise to a public duty of disclosure or the protection of the banker's own interests requires it<sup>1</sup>.

If a bank chooses to organise its business through a corporate structure involving separate companies, disclosure by one such company to another may constitute a breach of the duty of secrecy<sup>2</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(x) Secrecy, References and Advice/911. Order for inspection under the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879.

911. Order for inspection under the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879.

The Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 provides that any party to a legal proceeding<sup>1</sup> may apply to the court or a judge for an order that the applicant be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in a banker's book<sup>2</sup> for the purposes of such proceeding<sup>3</sup>.

The main object of these provisions is to enable evidence to be procured and given<sup>4</sup>, and to relieve bankers from the necessity of attending and producing their books<sup>5</sup>. They enable a party, who formerly had the right to issue a subpoena duces tecum to compel bankers to produce their books and to attend and be examined on them, to obtain an order for leave to inspect and take copies of the books<sup>6</sup>. They do not give any new power of disclosure<sup>7</sup>, or alter the principles of law or the practice with regard to disclosure<sup>8</sup>, or take away any previously existing ground of privilege<sup>9</sup>. Nor do they enable a party to obtain disclosure, before the trial, of entries which would be privileged or protected from production, or which are, or are sworn to be, irrelevant<sup>10</sup>, or which are sworn to tend to incriminate<sup>11</sup>, or which are not the subject of disclosure apart from the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879<sup>12</sup>. Where, therefore, a party swears that the entries sought to be inspected are irrelevant, his affidavit is conclusive, and no order for inspection should be made before the trial<sup>13</sup>.

The power to order inspection is a discretionary power<sup>14</sup>, and will be exercised with great caution<sup>15</sup>, and on sufficient grounds only<sup>16</sup>; and the order, if made, should be limited to relevant entries<sup>17</sup>. The order will be made only where the entries of which inspection is sought will be admissible in evidence at the trial<sup>18</sup>.

The fact that the banker's book containing the relevant entry is in the list of documents served by the other party does not preclude the obtaining of an order for inspection, and in a fit case an order will be made<sup>19</sup>. An order for inspection may be made against a bank which is a defendant to a tracing claim<sup>20</sup>.

Where a banker's book is in the possession, custody or power of a party to litigation and that party is in default of a court order requiring him to give disclosure of the documents, a bank which holds the documents as his agent may be required to disclose them<sup>21</sup>.

2 As to the meaning of 'bankers' books' see PARA 907 note 6.

3 Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 s 7; Re Marshfield, Marshfield v Hutchings (1886) 32 ChD 499. The order may be made on a bank in Scotland or Northern Ireland (Kissam v Link [1896] 1 QB 574, CA), and may be made by a magistrate (R v Kinghorn [1908] 2 KB 949). 'Court' means the court, judge, arbitrator, persons or person before whom a legal proceeding is held or taken; and 'judge' means, in England, a judge of the High Court, although a judge assigned to a county court district or acting as a judge so assigned may with respect to any proceedings in a county court exercise the powers of a judge under the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879: s 10 (definition amended by the Statute Law Revision Act 1898). BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(x) Secrecy, References and Advice/912. Order for inspection of accounts of non-parties.

912. Order for inspection of accounts of non-parties.

There is jurisdiction to order inspection under the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879<sup>1</sup> of accounts of non-parties to the litigation<sup>2</sup>. Except where the account sought to be inspected is in form or substance really the account of a party to the litigation or is kept on his behalf, so that the entries in it would be evidence against him at trial<sup>3</sup>, the power to order such inspection will be exercised only in exceptional circumstances<sup>4</sup>, such as where the evidence and fruits of crime and fraud might otherwise disappear<sup>5</sup>. Notice of the application should be given to the account holder<sup>6</sup> and preferably also the bank<sup>7</sup>.

Where such an order is made without notice, the non-party in respect of whose account it is made, or that party's bank, may apply to have the order set aside without being joined as a party to the action<sup>8</sup>.

913. Procedure on the application.

In the High Court an order for permission to inspect and take copies<sup>1</sup> may be made either with or without summoning the bank or any other party, and must be served on the bank three clear days before the order is to be obeyed, unless the court or judge otherwise directs<sup>2</sup>. In ordinary cases, the application should be supported by an affidavit showing what entries it is desired to inspect and the materiality of the inspection<sup>3</sup>, and that the application is made bona fide. An affidavit is not, however, essential<sup>4</sup>. The party whose account is sought to be inspected may oppose the application on any ground on which inspection of ordinary documents could be resisted<sup>5</sup>.

The costs of the application, and of anything done or to be done under the order, are in the court's discretion<sup>6</sup>. Where the whole or any part of the costs have been occasioned by any default or delay on the bank's part, they may be ordered to be paid by the bank to any party, any such order against a bank being enforceable as if the bank were a party to the proceeding<sup>7</sup>.

914. Disclosure order having extra-territorial effect.

Save in exceptional circumstances<sup>1</sup>, the court will not make an order under the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879<sup>2</sup> or require the production by a non-party of documents outside the jurisdiction concerning business which it has transacted outside the jurisdiction, especially where the non-party is a foreign bank<sup>3</sup>. The principle is that a state should refrain from demanding obedience to its sovereign authority by foreigners in respect of their conduct outside the jurisdiction<sup>4</sup>. In accordance with this principle, the court will generally not give effect to an order made in foreign proceedings against a non-party bank requiring production of documents relating to accounts maintained within the jurisdiction<sup>5</sup>.

The fact that the evidence sought to be obtained may be obtained by the issue of letters of request to a foreign court<sup>6</sup>, or by an application to a foreign court, generally weighs heavily against the court's making an extra-territorial order<sup>7</sup>.

915. Disclosure order in aid of tracing claims etc.

If a person through no fault of his own becomes involved in the tortious acts of others so as to facilitate their wrong-doing, he may incur no personal liability but he comes under a duty to assist the person who has been wronged by giving him full information and disclosing the identity of the wrong-doers<sup>1</sup>. Where there are grounds for thinking that money in a bank has been obtained by a customer's wrong-doing and belongs in equity to the claimant, the court has jurisdiction to order the bank to disclose documents relating to the money<sup>2</sup>. The documents which may be ordered to be disclosed are not limited to those within the provisions<sup>3</sup> of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879<sup>4</sup>. The claimant must give an undertaking in damages to the bank and must pay all and any expenses to which the bank is put in making the disclosure<sup>5</sup>. The international jurisdictional limits of this principle are the same as those for an order under the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879<sup>6</sup>.

916. Disclosure order under the Evidence (Proceedings in Other Jurisdictions) Act 1975.

Where an application is made to the High Court, and the court is satisfied: (1) that the application is made in pursuance of a request issued by or on behalf of a court or tribunal (the 'requesting court') exercising jurisdiction in any other part of the United Kingdom or in a country or territory outside the United Kingdom; and (2) that the evidence to which the application relates is to be obtained for the purposes of civil proceedings which either have been instituted before the requesting court or whose institution before that court is contemplated, the court has power by order to make such provision for obtaining evidence in the part of the United Kingdom in which it exercises jurisdiction as may appear to it to be appropriate for the purpose of giving effect to the request in pursuance of which the application is made<sup>1</sup>. Where the evidence sought to be obtained is evidence from a banker as to the affairs of a customer, the court, in exercising its discretion, must carry out a balancing exercise: in the scales on one side must be placed the desirable policy of assisting a foreign court, and, on the other, the opposing principle that the court will give great weight to the desirability of upholding the recognised duty of confidence<sup>2</sup>.

921. Bankers' references.

With his customer's express or implied consent, a banker is justified in answering inquiries regarding his customer's general position and character put to him by a person contemplating business relations with that customer<sup>1</sup>.

However, no claim lies against the banker in respect of any representation or assurance made or given concerning or relating to the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade or dealings of any person<sup>2</sup> made to the intent or purpose that such person may obtain credit, money or goods, unless such representation or assurance is made in writing and signed by the banker<sup>3</sup>. This protection applies to fraudulent misrepresentations<sup>4</sup>, and to misrepresentations alleged to give rise to liability under the Misrepresentation Act 1967<sup>5</sup>, but it does not apply to negligent misrepresentations<sup>6</sup>. The representation must relate in some way to the creditworthiness of a person<sup>7</sup>. The signature on behalf of a company of its duly authorised agent acting within the scope of his authority is, for this purpose, the signature of the company<sup>8</sup>. A representation made by an individual must be in writing and signed by him, and accordingly no claim lies against a non-signing partner even if he has ratified the act of the signing partner<sup>9</sup>.

The making of a credit reference or other representation as to a person may give rise to liability for breach of fiduciary duty<sup>10</sup>, or for breach of a common law duty of care<sup>11</sup>.

Where the banker may be held responsible, it is immaterial whether he gave the information direct to the person acting on it or to another banker in order that it might be communicated to him<sup>12</sup>.

A disclaimer of liability which amounts to a notice which purports to exclude liability for negligence is therefore ineffective unless it satisfies the requirement of reasonableness<sup>13</sup>.

Where it is within the scope of a bank's business to advise on financial affairs, it owes a customer to whom it offers such advice or assistance a contractual duty to exercise reasonable skill and care<sup>1</sup>; and it will not avail the bank that it has issued secret instructions not to give such advice<sup>2</sup>. If the customer is advised in a matter in which the bank has conflicting interests, the conflict should be fully disclosed<sup>3</sup>.

923. Nature of letters of credit.

A letter of credit is an undertaking by a bank to pay to the beneficiary of the credit, or to accept and pay drafts drawn by the beneficiary, in accordance with the terms and conditions of the credit. A letter of credit may be addressed: (1) to banks generally, or to all banks within a specified country or territory; or (2) to one or more specified banks. All banks to whom a credit is addressed are known as nominated banks.

A credit may contain an instruction to a bank either merely to advise the beneficiary of the credit, without any commitment, or to add its confirmatory undertaking to it, in which case the beneficiary has the promise of both banks. Where a credit is intended to facilitate trade, it is called a commercial letter of credit<sup>1</sup>.

It is often made a condition of a mercantile contract that the buyer is to pay for the goods by means of an irrevocable credit<sup>2</sup>, and it is then the buyer's duty to procure that his bank, known as the issuing bank, issues an irrevocable credit in favour of the seller by which the bank undertakes to the seller, either directly or through another bank in the seller's country, to pay or accept drafts drawn upon him for the price of the goods, against the tender by the seller of the shipping documents.

1 As to commercial letters of credit see PARA 924.

2 As to irrevocable credits see further PARA 928.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/A. IN GENERAL/924. Commercial letters of credit.

924. Commercial letters of credit.

Where buyer and seller are in different countries, the bank issuing the credit at the instance of a buyer does so usually through a bank in the other country; the authorisation of the issuing bank is addressed to the other bank and instructs it to advise the credit to the beneficiary with or without committing itself by adding its confirmation. The bank issuing the credit is called the issuing bank; the second bank, which advises the beneficiary, is an advising, negotiating, confirming or paying bank according to the role it plays<sup>1</sup>.

Commercial letters of credit may be of two types, namely revocable and irrevocable credits<sup>2</sup>. Irrevocable credits may be confirmed or unconfirmed<sup>3</sup>. They may take several forms, but the more common are those by which a banker undertakes to pay against documents of title to goods; or he may engage himself to negotiate drafts accompanied by such documents of title, or to accept drafts drawn under the credit<sup>4</sup>. Credits create a binding contract to accept or pay bills on the specified conditions, enforceable against the bank by a beneficiary who has acted on the faith of it<sup>5</sup>. Similarly, if the credit requests payments to be made or money advanced apart from acceptance of bills<sup>6</sup>, and such payments or advances are made to the grantee on production of the letter, the bank becomes liable to the party making them<sup>7</sup>. Where a credit issued pursuant to a cif contract<sup>8</sup> calls for a guarantee by the buyers through their bankers that documents will be taken up on first presentation, such a guarantee may be held to be exactly the same as a letter of credit and so have to be available within a reasonable time before the first date for shipment<sup>9</sup>. Possession of the letter is not sufficient evidence that the person presenting it is the grantee<sup>10</sup>.

A credit may be a revolving credit, of which one type is that in which sums drawn may be added to the balance so as to keep the total amount available always up to the permitted figure<sup>11</sup>.

Where 'usual documents' were called for, it was held that this meant those which under a cif contract would be expected in the particular trade: BORTHWICK V BANK OF NEW ZEALAND (1900) 17 TLR 2. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/A. IN GENERAL/925. Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits.

925. Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits.

Commercial letters of credit almost invariably incorporate the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (the 'Uniform Customs and Practice')<sup>1</sup>, which apply to all documentary credits<sup>2</sup>, including, to the extent to which they may be applicable, standby letters of credit<sup>3</sup>, where they are incorporated into the text of the credit; and they are binding on all parties unless otherwise expressly agreed<sup>4</sup>.

Where a credit incorporates the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits 'except so far as otherwise stated', it is wrong to approach the construction of the credit by looking at the document first without reference to the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits<sup>5</sup>; and, if there is ambiguity as to the meaning of the provisions of the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits, the ambiguity should, if possible, be resolved in a way which will result in their reflecting the position under general maritime and commercial law<sup>6</sup>.

1 le the ICC Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) (UCP600), copyright 2006, International Chamber of Commerce (ICC), Paris. This replaces the ICC Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) (UCP500), copyright 1993, International Chamber of Commerce (ICC), Paris. Copies of these and other ICC publications are available from ICC Publishing SA, 38 Cours Albert 1er, 75008 Paris, France, or from ICC United Kingdom, 12 Grosvenor Place, London SW1X 7HH. For a comparison of the 1983 and the 1993 Revisions see Documentary Credits: UCP 500 and 400 compared (1993 revision) (UCP 511); and for a comparison of the 1993 and 2007 Revisions see Prof James Byrne The Comparison of UCP600 and UCP500 (Institute of International Banking Law and Practice Inc).

The 2007 Revision has an 'effective' date of 1 July 2007 but this is a general guideline only as to when the rules should be put into effect and, as the rules are not law, this date has no binding effect. The 1993 Revision is likely to be relevant for some time to come as some letters of credit may specifically refer to that version. However according to the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 1, the rules apply to any documentary credit ('credit') (including, to the extent to which they may be applicable, any standby letter of credit) when the text of the credit expressly indicates that it is subject to these rules; furthermore they are binding on all parties thereto unless expressly modified or excluded by the credit. While there may be a period while adjustments are made, the majority of commercial letters of credit are likely to be issued subject to it after July 2007. It is considered that the 2007 Revision may be the most extensive revision of the six (revised) versions of the UCP (previous versions being issued in 1933 (UCP82), 1951 (UCP151), 1962 (UCP222), 1974 (UCP290), 1983 (UCP400) and 1993 (UCP500)). It has been reorganised, some new concepts and terms have been added and there are new expressions of older concepts with definitions and interpretations now located in their own provisions: see Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) arts 2, 3. The 2007 Revision is intended to be clearer, simpler, easier to follow and more precise rather than to introduce radical change.

Also of relevance is the Supplement to the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits for Electronic Presentation (eUCP) which supplements the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) in order to accommodate presentation of electronic records alone or in combination with paper documents. In a similar way it applies where the credit indicates that it is subject to it (see arts e1, e2). Like other ICC publications, it is available from the ICC Publishing SA or ICC United Kingdom.

What follows (see PARA 926 et seq) is a brief overview with reference to both the 2007 and 1993 Revisions of the Uniform Customs and Practice but for more detail and full texts specialist works should be consulted: see eg the Encyclopaedia of Banking Law.

It should be noted that, as the provisions of the Uniform Customs and Practice do not have the force of law, in the exceptional case where they are not incorporated, the position is governed by the common law. As to the application of the Uniform Customs and Practice generally see Credit Agricole Indosuez v Generale Bank (Seco Steel Trading Inc) (No 2) [1999] 2 All ER (Comm) 1016.

2 The Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 2 defines 'credit' as being any arrangement, however named or described, that is irrevocable and thereby constitutes a definite undertaking of the issuing bank to honour a complying presentation'. The definition in the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 2 is substantially broader defining the expressions 'documentary credit(s)' and 'standby letter(s) of credit' ('credit(s)') as meaning any arrangement, however named or described, whereby a bank (the 'issuing bank'), acting at the request and on the instructions of a customer (the 'applicant') or on its own behalf: (1) is to make a payment to or to the order of a third party (the 'beneficiary') or is to pay or accept bills of exchange ('drafts') drawn by the beneficiary; (2) authorises another bank to effect such payment, or to accept and pay such bills of exchange ('drafts'); or (3) authorises another bank to negotiate, against stipulated documents, provided that the terms and conditions of the credit are complied with: furthermore branches of a bank in different countries are considered another bank. Reference should also be made to art 9(a) referring to an irrevocable credit constituting a definite undertaking of the issuing bank. The much simpler and narrower definition in the 2007 Revision may well exclude some transactions thought to be letters of credit.

3 As to the meaning of 'standby letter(s) of credit' see note 2. The basic difference between a standby letter of credit and other documentary credits is that the standby letter of credit is issued to protect the beneficiary against non-performance or default, usually that of the applicant, whereas the traditional documentary letter of credit is intended to be drawn on where the beneficiary/seller performs his part of the underlying contract. The extent to which the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) applies to standby letters of credit is left undefined. However as to the clearer and narrower definition in the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) see note 2.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/A. IN GENERAL/926. Credits as autonomous transactions.

926. Credits as autonomous transactions.

Credits<sup>1</sup>, by their nature, are separate transactions from the sales or other contract or contracts on which they may be based and banks are in no way concerned with, or bound by, such contract or contracts, even if any reference whatsoever to such contract or contracts is included in the credit<sup>2</sup>. Banks deal with documents, and not with goods, services or other performances to which the documents may relate<sup>3</sup>.

An international sale of goods transaction to be financed by means of a confirmed irrevocable documentary credit<sup>4</sup> in fact involves four autonomous though interconnected contractual relations:

- 34 (1) the underlying contract for the sale of goods, to which the only parties are the buyer and the seller;
- 35 (2) the contract between the buyer and the issuing bank under which the latter agrees to issue the credit and either itself or through a confirming bank to notify the credit to the seller and to make payments to, or to the order of, the seller (or to pay, accept or negotiate bills of exchange drawn by the seller) against presentation of stipulated documents, and the buyer agrees to reimburse the issuing bank for payments made under the credit; for such reimbursement the stipulated documents, if they include a document of title such as a bill of lading, constitute a security available to the issuing bank;
- 36 (3) if payment is to be made through a confirming bank, the contract between the issuing bank and the confirming bank authorising the latter to make such payments and to remit the stipulated documents to the issuing bank when they are received, the issuing bank in turn agreeing to reimburse the confirming bank for payments made under the credit;
- 37 (4) the contract between the confirming bank and the seller under which the confirming bank undertakes to pay to the seller (or to accept or negotiate without recourse to drawer bills of exchange drawn by him) up to the amount of the credit against presentation of the stipulated documents<sup>5</sup>.

The interconnections are such that the contractual duty owed by confirming and issuing banks to the buyer to honour the credit notified by him on presentation of apparently conforming documents by the seller, despite the fact that they contain inaccuracies or even are forged, is matched by a corresponding liability of the confirming bank to the seller/beneficiary, in the absence of any fraud on his part, to pay the sum stipulated in the credit upon presentation of apparently conforming documents<sup>6</sup>. It is, however, undecided whether, in the case of payment under reserve where the documents are ultimately rejected<sup>7</sup>, the obligations owed by the issuing bank to the confirming bank<sup>8</sup> are matched by identical obligations owed by the confirming bank to the beneficiary<sup>9</sup>.

The autonomy of the credit is such that: (a) the beneficiary can in no case make use of the contractual relationships existing between the banks or between the applicant for the credit and the issuing bank<sup>10</sup>; (b) banks are not entitled to refuse payment in reliance upon the terms of the contract between the buyer and the seller<sup>11</sup>; and (c) the buyer is not entitled on the ground of alleged defects in the goods to an injunction restraining the seller from drawing on the credit<sup>12</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 4; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 3. See generally PARA 925 note 1. Consequently, the undertaking of a bank to honour or negotiate or fulfil any other obligations under the credit, is not subject to claims or defences by the applicant resulting from his relationships with the issuing bank or the beneficiary: art 4. The provisions are broadly similar but without that warning but the 2007 Revision version also has a warning against adding as part of the credit copies of the underlying contract or similar documents. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/A. IN GENERAL/927. Performance bonds.

927. Performance bonds.

By issuing a performance bond or performance guarantee<sup>1</sup>, a bank assumes obligations to a buyer or other beneficiary analogous to those assumed by a confirming bank to the seller under a documentary credit<sup>2</sup>. A bank which gives a performance guarantee must honour that guarantee according to its terms; it is not concerned in the least with the relations between the supplier and the customer; nor with the question whether the supplier has performed his contractual obligation or not; nor with the question whether the supplier is in default or not; and, subject to the fraud exception<sup>3</sup>, the bank must pay according to its guarantee, on demand, if so stipulated, without proof or conditions<sup>4</sup>. A performance bond is virtually a promissory note payable on demand<sup>5</sup>, and certainly has much more of the characteristics of a promissory note than of a guarantee<sup>6</sup>. The bank is simply concerned to see whether the event has happened upon which its obligation to pay arises<sup>7</sup>.

Where a performance bond is payable on demand upon the occurrence of a specified event, the beneficiary's demand must state that the event has occurred<sup>8</sup>.

1 The difference between the terms 'performance bond' and 'performance guarantee' appears to be purely semantic. As to more extensive discussion of performance bonds or performance guarantees see PARA 1271 et seq.

B. FORM AND NOTIFICATION OF CREDITS

928. Revocable and irrevocable credits.

Credits<sup>1</sup> may be either revocable or irrevocable; and all credits, therefore generally or at least previously were required to indicate clearly whether they are revocable or irrevocable<sup>2</sup>. A credit is irrevocable despite the absence of any indication to that effect<sup>3</sup>.

A bank authorised to effect payment is not bound to advise the beneficiary of the revocation of a revocable credit<sup>4</sup>; and, where a revocable credit takes the form of an authority to purchase drafts<sup>5</sup>, any bank acting on the strength of the authority must be deemed to know its terms<sup>6</sup>.

A credit<sup>7</sup> constitutes a definite undertaking of the issuing bank, provided that the stipulated documents are presented to the nominated bank or to the issuing bank and that the terms and conditions of the credit are complied with and there should be provision for the issuing bank to honour if the credit is available by sight payment, deferred payment, acceptance with the issuing bank or in certain circumstances with a nominated bank or by negotiation with a nominated bank and that nominated bank does not negotiate<sup>8</sup>.

Where a credit, not stated to be irrevocable or otherwise, states that it will remain in force for a given period, it cannot be revoked as against negotiators of bills drawn under the credit and negotiated within the period of validity on the strength of the credit<sup>9</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 6(a), (b). There is no corresponding article in the 2007 Revision: see note 3. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

3 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 3 PARA 2; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 6(c). The provision of the 2007 Revision is almost identical although it makes no reference to revocability on the basis that revocable letters of credit are rarely encountered in practice; the 1993 Revision version provided that in the absence of any indication the credit was deemed to be irrevocable. A provision of the 1993 Revision (see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 8) relates to revocation of a credit and therefore has no equivalent in the 2007 Revision. Under that provision a revocable credit could be amended or cancelled by the issuing bank at any moment and without prior notice to the beneficiary (see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 8(a)). The issuing bank however still had several duties in regard to reimbursement: see art 8(b); and also Gelpcke v Quentell 74 NY 599 (1878), CA. Where a revocable credit is intended then this should be expressly stated in the body of the credit.

4 See Cape Asbestos Co Ltd v Lloyds Bank Ltd [1921] WN 274; and see also Giddens v Anglo-African Produce Co Ltd (1923) 14 Ll L Rep 230. Note however that in the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) there is no provision about revocable credits: see note 3.

8 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 7(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 9(a). In the 2007 Revision there is also a provision (see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 7(b)) that an issuing bank is irrevocably bound to honour as of the time it issues the credit but there is no such provision in the 1993 Revision, although otherwise the articles are similar though worded differently.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/B. FORM AND NOTIFICATION OF CREDITS/929. Buyer and issuing bank.

929. Buyer and issuing bank.

A letter of credit comes into being as the result of a formal written application by the applicant, usually the buyer<sup>1</sup>, and the contractual relationship is defined by the terms of the agreement between them under which the credit is issued. The buyer who pursuant to his sales contract instructs his bank to open a credit undertakes to put the bank in funds or to reimburse it, provided the documents against which the bank pays are what the bank calls for. The bank is bound to apply the funds to the purpose to which they are appropriated<sup>2</sup>; but, if it becomes insolvent before this is done, the buyer has only a right to prove<sup>3</sup>.

Where, in accordance with a credit opened at the request of the seller's agents (the defendants), an issuing bank accepted drafts against documents of title which it released in trust to the seller's agents, who delivered the documents to the buyer against payment which, after notice that the bank had gone into liquidation, they remitted to the seller, the issuing bank was held not entitled to the money because it had evinced an intention not to honour the seller's draft at maturity; accordingly the seller's agents were released from their obligation to put the bank in funds and the seller was entitled to be released from his obligation under his pledge of the documents to the issuing bank<sup>4</sup>.

The bank must comply rigidly with its instructions<sup>5</sup>, and the same applies to the intermediary bank<sup>6</sup>, the latter being indemnified by the former if it complies strictly with its instructions<sup>7</sup>. There is ordinarily no privity between the buyer and the paying (intermediary) bank<sup>8</sup>.

930. Form of credits.

Previously there was a rule that instructions for the issue of credits<sup>1</sup>, the credits themselves, instructions for any amendments to them and the amendments themselves had to be complete and precise; and in order to guard against confusion and misunderstanding, banks should discourage any attempt to include excessive detail in the credit or in any amendment to the credit; and to give instructions in regard to a credit by reference to a credit previously issued where such previous credit has been subject to amendments<sup>2</sup>. If incomplete or unclear instructions were received in regard to a credit, the bank requested to act on such instructions could give preliminary notification to the beneficiary for information only and without responsibility; and the credit was to be issued, confirmed, advised or amended only when the necessary information had been received and if the bank is at that stage prepared to act on the instructions<sup>3</sup>.

All credits must clearly indicate whether they are available by sight payment, by deferred payment, by acceptance or by negotiation; and they must nominate the bank (the 'nominated bank') which is authorised to pay, to incur a deferred payment undertaking, to accept drafts<sup>4</sup> or to negotiate<sup>5</sup>. There are various provisions governing nomination matters<sup>6</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 5(a), (b). There is no equivalent to art 5 in the 2007 Revision. See generally PARA 925 note 1. Notwithstanding the provision in the 1993 Revision modern credits tend to stipulate for presentation of numerous documents, and not infrequently refer to a state of fact without specifying the documentary evidence to be tendered in respect of such fact. See further PARA 950.

3 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 12 which also provides that banks should provide the necessary information without delay. As to the beneficiary see PARA 925 note 2. There is no equivalent to art 12 in the 2007 Revision. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

4 As to the meaning of 'draft' see PARA 925 note 2.

5 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 6(a), (b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 10(a), (b).

6 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 12; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 10. These are substantially similar in substance if not in wording although the 2007 Revision version expressly permits a nominated bank to prepay or purchase its own accepted draft or a deferred payment undertaking. As to the obligation to reimburse see PARA 949.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/B. FORM AND NOTIFICATION OF CREDITS/931. Applicant (buyer) and beneficiary (seller).

931. Applicant (buyer) and beneficiary (seller).

If the underlying contract between the applicant (buyer) and the beneficiary (seller) provides for payment by confirmed credit, the credit, in the absence of express stipulation, must be available to the seller at the beginning of the shipment period<sup>1</sup> and the contract is not satisfied by the buyer procuring a revocable credit<sup>2</sup>.

Where the parties do not, in their sale contract, define the terms of the proposed letter of credit, the letter of credit as subsequently agreed between the parties may fill the contractual gap<sup>3</sup>.

Where a letter of credit is regarded as absolute payment, the buyer's obligation to pay the price is discharged upon the opening of a conforming credit even if the issuing bank becomes insolvent<sup>4</sup>. A letter of credit is, however, not to be regarded as absolute payment unless the seller expressly or impliedly stipulates that it should be so<sup>5</sup>. He may do so impliedly if he stipulates for the credit to be issued by a particular bank in such circumstances that it is to be inferred that the seller looks to that particular bank to the exclusion of the buyer<sup>6</sup>.

Where a letter of credit is conditional payment, the buyer is discharged if the seller fails to obtain payment because of failure on his part to comply with its terms<sup>7</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/B. FORM AND NOTIFICATION OF CREDITS/932. Teletransmitted and pre-advised credits.

932. Teletransmitted and pre-advised credits.

When an issuing bank instructs a bank (the 'advising bank') by an authenticated teletransmission to advise a credit<sup>1</sup> or an amendment to a credit, the teletransmission will be deemed to be the operative credit instrument or amendment, and any subsequent mail confirmation should be disregarded<sup>2</sup>. However, if the teletransmission states 'full details to follow' (or something of similar effect) or that the mail confirmation is to be the operative credit instrument or amendment, then the teletransmission will not be deemed to be the operative credit instrument or amendment; and the issuing bank must forward the operative credit instrument or amendment to the advising bank without delay<sup>3</sup>.

If a bank uses the services of an advising bank to have the credit advised to the beneficiary, it must also use the services of the same bank in regard to advising any amendments<sup>4</sup>.

A preliminary advice of the issue or amendment of a credit ('pre-advice'), must only be given by an issuing bank if such bank is prepared to issue the operative credit instrument or amendment and in such circumstances the issuing bank having given such pre-advice is irrevocably committed to issue or amend the credit, in terms not inconsistent with the pre-advice, without delay<sup>5</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 11(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 11(a)(i). The provisions are similar in substance although the 1993 Revision version is much wordier. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

3 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 11(a) (second paragraph); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 11(a)(ii) which are in similar terms.

5 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 11(b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 11(c). The provisions are similar although the 1993 Revision version refers to an 'irrevocable credit' (but see PARA 928).

933. Advising and confirming of credits.

A credit<sup>1</sup> and any amendment may be advised to a beneficiary through another bank (the 'advising bank') and that bank, by advising the credit or amendment signifies that it has satisfied itself as to authenticity and related matters<sup>2</sup>.

Provided that the stipulated documents are presented to the bank confirming the credit<sup>3</sup> (the 'confirming bank') or to any other nominated bank and such documents amount to a complying presentation, the confirming bank must (1) honour if the credit is available by sight payment, deferred payment, acceptance with the issuing bank or in certain circumstances with a nominated bank or by negotiation with a nominated bank and that nominated bank does not negotiate; (2) negotiate if the credit is available by negotiation with the confirming bank<sup>4</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 9(a), (b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 7(a). If the bank elects not to advise the credit, it must inform the issuing bank without delay: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 9(e); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 7(a). The same bank must be used for advising a credit and advising any amendment to it: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 9(d); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 11(b). The provisions appear similar in effect although have different wording. In addition the 2007 Revision has a specific similar provision on where the advising bank uses the services of a second advising bank: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 9(c). The 1993 Revision also has a provision dealing with the situation where authenticity cannot be established and the actions that should be taken: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 7(b). As to the beneficiary, and as to the issuing bank, see PARA 925 note 2. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

3 As to irrevocable credits see PARA 928.

4 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 8(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 9(b) which are in broadly similar terms although worded differently. In the 2007 Revision there is also a provision (see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 8(b)) that a confirming bank is irrevocably bound to honour as of the time it issues the credit but there is no such provision in the 1993 Revision. It has been held in the United States that a bank may confirm a non-bank's credit: Barclays Bank DCO v Mercantile National Bank [1973] 2 Lloyd's Rep 541, US Ct of Appeals.

The relation between the confirming (and issuing) bank and beneficiary is contractual: see Urquhart, Lindsay & Co Ltd v Eastern Bank Ltd [1922] 1 KB 318 at 321 per Rowlatt J; Donald H Scott & Co Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1923] 2 KB 1 at 14, CA, per Scrutton LJ; United City Merchants (Investments) Ltd v Royal Bank of Canada

C. AMENDMENT AND TRANSFER OF CREDITS

934. Amendment of credits.

A revocable credit<sup>1</sup> could be amended or cancelled by the issuing bank at any moment and without prior notice to the beneficiary<sup>2</sup>. An irrevocable credit<sup>3</sup> can neither be amended nor cancelled without the agreement of the issuing bank, the confirming bank, if any, and the beneficiary; and partial acceptance of amendments contained in one and the same advice of amendment is not allowed and consequently will be deemed rejection of the amendment<sup>4</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2. As to revocable and irrevocable credits see PARA 928.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 8(a). There is no direct equivalent in the 2007 Revision as it makes no reference to revocable credits: see further PARA 928. As to the issuing bank, and as to the beneficiary, see PARA 925 note 2.

3 Note that in the 2007 Revision all credits are irrevocable: see PARA 928.

4 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 10(a), (e); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 9(d)(i), (iv). Both are expressed to be subject to provisions on transferable credit: see PARA 935. In the 2007 Revision there is a provision requiring the bank advising an amendment to inform the bank from whom it received the amendment of any notification of acceptance or rejection: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 10(d). Generally the issuing bank will put itself at risk if it consents to an amendment without the prior consent of the applicant. As to the drafting of amendments see PARA 930.

The issuing bank is irrevocably bound by an amendment issued by it from the time of its issue; and a confirming bank may extend its confirmation to an amendment and is irrevocably bound as of the time of its advice of the amendment; however, a confirming bank may choose to advise an amendment to the beneficiary without extending its confirmation and if so must inform the issuing bank and the beneficiary in its advice without delay: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 10(b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 9(d)(ii). The terms of the original credit (or one incorporating previously accepted amendments) remain in force for the beneficiary until he communicates his acceptance of the amendment to the bank that advised the amendment; the beneficiary must give notification of acceptance or rejection of amendments; and if the beneficiary fails to give the notification, the tender of documents to the nominated bank or the issuing bank that conform to the credit and to not yet accepted amendments, is deemed to be notification of acceptance by the beneficiary of the amendments and as of that moment the credit will be amended: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 10(c); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 9(d)(iii). The provisions are similar in effect with some minor differences in wording. See generally PARA 925 note 1. In the 2007 Revision there is also a provision that any amendment which provides that it shall enter into force unless rejected by the beneficiary by a certain time is to be disregarded: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 10(f).

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/C. AMENDMENT AND TRANSFER OF CREDITS/935. Transfer of credits.

935. Transfer of credits.

A transferable credit is a credit<sup>1</sup> which says it is 'transferable' and a transferable credit may be made available in whole or in part to another beneficiary (the 'second beneficiary') at the request of the beneficiary (the 'first beneficiary') to the bank authorised to pay, incur a deferred payment undertaking, accept or negotiate (the 'transferring bank'), or in the case of a freely negotiable credit, the bank specifically authorised in the credit as a transferring bank<sup>2</sup>. The bank requested to effect the transfer (the 'transferring bank') is under no obligation to effect such transfer except to the extent and in the manner expressly consented to by such bank<sup>3</sup>. The mere designation of a credit as transferable is insufficient to constitute consent to a subsequent transfer request, since the request and consent contemplated are to effect a transfer to a particular extent and in a particular manner<sup>4</sup>.

Bank charges in respect of transfers are payable by the first beneficiary unless otherwise specified<sup>5</sup>.

Provision is made for partial transfer<sup>6</sup>. The transferred credit must reflect the terms and conditions of the credit, including confirmation, with the exception of the amount of the credit, any unit prices stated in it, the expiry date, the last shipment date or period, any or all of which may be reduced or curtailed; and there is provision for increase in insurance cover and for substitution of the name of the first beneficiary<sup>7</sup>.

The first beneficiary has the right to substitute his own invoices, and drafts<sup>8</sup> for those of the second beneficiary, for amounts not in excess of the original amount stipulated in the credit and for the original unit prices if stipulated in the credit, and upon such substitution of invoices (and drafts) the first beneficiary can draw under the credit for the difference, if any, between his invoices and the second beneficiary's invoices<sup>9</sup>.

Provision is made for the first beneficiary of a transferable credit to request that the payment or negotiation be effected to a second beneficiary at the place to which the credit has been transferred up to and including the expiry date of the credit<sup>10</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 38(a), (b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 48(a), (b), (c). The two articles are similar in effect but the 2007 Revision has a number of clarifications and changes in definitions of transfer terms and has specific provisions about the duty of a transferring bank, the right to present the second beneficiary's documents and the place where the second beneficiary must present documents. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

For a case in which damages were awarded when the transferring bank sent a copy of the second beneficiary's invoice to a third party, instead of to the first beneficiary, leading to the third party ceasing to do business with the first beneficiary, see Jackson v Royal Bank of Scotland [2000] EWCA Civ 203, [2000] All ER (D) 881. See also Struthers v Commercial Bank of Scotland (1842) 4 D 460.

3 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 38(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 48(c). There is also provision for the conditions under which amendments may be advised to the second beneficiary: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 38(e); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 48(d). Where a credit is transferred to more than one second beneficiary, there is provision for when there is refusal of an amendment by one or more second beneficiaries: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 38(f); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 48(e). See note 2.

6 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 38(d); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 48(g). A transferred credit cannot be transferred at the request of the second beneficiary to any subsequent third beneficiary. See note 2.

7 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 38(g); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 48(h). See note 2.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/C. AMENDMENT AND TRANSFER OF CREDITS/936. Assignment of proceeds.

936. Assignment of proceeds.

The fact that a credit<sup>1</sup> is not stated to be transferable does not affect the beneficiary's right to assign any proceeds to which he may be or may become entitled under such credit, in accordance with the provisions of the applicable law<sup>2</sup>. This relates only to the assignment of proceeds and not to the assignment of the right to perform under the credit itself<sup>3</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 39; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 49. The two provisions are almost identical. See generally PARA 925 note 1. As to assignments of choses or things in action see CHOSSES IN ACTION vol 13 (2009) PARA 14 et seq.

3 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 39; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 49. See note 2. Whether there can be a valid assignment of the right to present documents under a credit which is not stated to be transferable is undecided. The apparent intention (see also PARA 935) is that such an assignment should not be effective. This result could perhaps be reached either by reference to authorities in which the benefit of a personal contract has been held unassignable (see eg Kemp v Baerselman [1906] 2 KB 604, CA) or on the principle that parties may by agreement deprive an otherwise assignable chose or thing in action of the quality of assignability (see Helstan Securities Ltd v Hertfordshire County Council [1978] 3 All ER 262).

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/D. DOCUMENTS/937. Documents to be stipulated precisely.

D. DOCUMENTS

937. Documents to be stipulated precisely.

It is to the obvious advantage of all parties to a documentary letter of credit that the documents to be presented should be stipulated with precision. All instructions for the issue of credits<sup>1</sup> and the credits themselves and, where applicable, all instructions for amendments to credits and the amendments themselves, must, therefore, state precisely the document or documents against which payment, acceptance or negotiation is to be made<sup>2</sup>. Terms such as 'first class', 'well known', 'qualified', 'independent', 'official', 'competent' are not to be used to describe the issuer and any issuer except the beneficiary may issue the document<sup>3</sup>.

One original of each document is usually required and banks are to treat as original documents bearing an apparently original signature, mark, stamp or label unless there are indications that the document is not original<sup>4</sup>.

Unless otherwise indicated, banks will also accept as original documents any documents appearing to be written, typed, perforated or stamped by the document issuer's hand or appearing to be on the latter's original stationery or stating that it is original<sup>5</sup>.

Where copies of documents are required either originals or copies are permitted<sup>6</sup>. Credits that require multiple documents will be satisfied by the presentation of one original and the remaining number in copies except where indicated otherwise<sup>7</sup>.

A requirement that a document be legalised, visaed, certified or similar, will be satisfied by any signature, mark, stamp or label on the document appearing to satisfy the requirement<sup>8</sup>.

Documents may be dated prior to the issuance date of the credit but not later than its date of presentation<sup>9</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See PARA 930.

3 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 3 PARA 6; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 20(a). The 2007 Revision version is much simpler in language but appears to be of similar effect. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

4 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 17(a), (b). There are no equivalent provisions in the 1993 Revision. See also note 5.

5 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 17(c); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 20(b). The 1993 Revision version was rather different referring to documents produced by reprographic systems, or automated or computerised systems, as carbon copies, provided they are marked as original and, where necessary, appear to have been signed. These provisions address issues of originality (ie when original documents are required, what is an original, what is a copy and what is required when multiple copies are presented). The 2007 Revision version has some changes that reflect mistaken judicial interpretations of the 1993 Revision: see the ICC policy statement of July 1999. A document may be signed by handwriting, by facsimile signature, by perforated signature, by stamp, by symbol, or by any other mechanical or electronic method of authentication: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 3; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 20(b). See note 3. A signature is not a substitute for a marking as an original: Glencore International AG v Bank of China [1996] 1 Lloyd's Rep 135, CA. A document which is clearly the original, as it contains the relevant contract and is not itself a copy of some other document, is an original for the purposes of the rule: Kredietbank Antwerp v Midland Bank plc; Karaganda Ltd v Midland Bank plc [1999] 1 All ER (Comm) 801, CA, distinguishing Glencore International AG v Bank of China above. The position was codified by a policy statement issued by the ICC in July 1999, which was applied by the court in Crédit Industriel et Commercial v China Merchants Bank [2002] EWHC 973 (Comm), [2002] 2 All ER (Comm) 427.

6 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 17(d); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 20(c)(i). The provisions are of similar effect although differently worded. See notes 3, 5.

7 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 17(e); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 20(c)(ii). See notes 3, 5.

8 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 3; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 20(d). See notes 3, 5.

9 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 14(i); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 22. The 2007 Revision is rather simpler in language and forms part of a large new important provision (ie the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 14) which represents a major reorganisation of many provisions from the 1993 Revision (eg the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) arts 13, 14, 43, 21, 22, 30, 31) relating to general rules regarding compliance of documents.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/D. DOCUMENTS/938. Doctrine of strict compliance.

938. Doctrine of strict compliance.

The documents must conform strictly with the terms of the credit; and there is no room for documents which are almost the same or which will do just as well as those specified<sup>1</sup>. If, however, the documents conform with the terms of the credit, the banker is not concerned as to whether the documents for which the buyer has stipulated serve any useful commercial purpose or as to why the customer called for tender of a document of a particular description<sup>2</sup> or as to the legal effect of a document vis-à-vis the applicant<sup>3</sup>. It forms no part of the bank's function, when considering whether to pay against the documents presented to it, to speculate about the underlying facts<sup>4</sup>.

Where the credit calls for shipping documents, they must so conform to accustomed shipping documents as to be reasonably fit to pass current in commerce<sup>5</sup>. If, however, a bill of lading is merchantable in this sense, it is not a requirement, unless expressly so stipulated, that the bill must be in usual form<sup>6</sup>.

A tender of documents which, properly read and understood, call for further inquiry or are such as to invite litigation is clearly a bad tender<sup>7</sup>.

939. Transport documents.

Unless a credit<sup>1</sup> calling for a transport document stipulates as such document a road, rail or inland waterway transport document, or a post receipt or certificate of posting<sup>2</sup>, then, unless otherwise stipulated in the credit, banks must accept a document of the type called for, however named, which appears to indicate the name of the carrier and to have been signed by the carrier or his agent or indicate receipt by signature or otherwise<sup>3</sup>; and indicates the place of shipment and the place of destination stipulated in the credit<sup>4</sup>. In the absence of any indication on the transport document as to the numbers issued, banks will accept the transport documents presented as constituting a full set<sup>5</sup>.

There are specific provisions accepting transshipment<sup>6</sup> even if the credit prohibits it<sup>7</sup>.

There are also provisions governing multimodal transport documents (which are transport documents covering at least two different modes of transport)<sup>8</sup>; and provisions relating to air transport documents<sup>9</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 A courier receipt however named must appear to indicate: (1) the name of the courier service and to have been stamped by that service at the place from which the credit states the goods are to be shipped; (2) a date of pick-up or of receipt or similar wording: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 25(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 29(b). See generally PARA 925 note 1.

3 The date of issue will be deemed to be the date of shipment unless the transport document contains a reception stamp, in which case the date of the reception stamp will be deemed to be the date of shipment: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 25(c); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 29(a). At common law the bills of lading must indicate that the goods have been 'shipped', not merely 'received for shipment': Diamond Alkali Export Corp'n v Bourgeois [1921] 3 KB 443; Donald H Scott & Co Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1923] 2 KB 1; cf Marlborough Hill (Ship) v Cowan & Sons [1921] 1 AC 444. See also Westpac Banking Corp'n v South Carolina National Bank [1986] 1 Lloyd's Rep 311, PC.

4 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 24(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 28(a).

5 see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 25(c); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 28(b). See note 3.

6 For this purpose, 'transshipment' means unloading and reloading from one means of conveyance to another, in different modes of transport, during the course of carriage from the place of shipment to the place of destination stipulated in the credit: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 24(d); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 28(c).

7 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 24(e); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 28(d). See note 3.

8 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 19; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 26. The provisions are similar although the 2007 Revision version makes changes relating to providing the name of the master and transshipment.

9 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 23; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 27. The provisions are similar but the 2007 Revision version changes the rule in regard to the date of issuance where the air waybill states an actual date of shipment.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/D. DOCUMENTS/940. Bills of lading, non-negotiable sea waybills and charter party bills of lading.

940. Bills of lading, non-negotiable sea waybills and charter party bills of lading.

If a credit<sup>1</sup> calls for a bill of lading or a non-negotiable sea waybill covering a port-to-port shipment, then such a document must appear to: (1) indicate the name of the carrier and to have been signed by or on behalf of the carrier or his named agent or the master or his named agent; (2) indicate that the goods have been loaded on board or shipped on a named vessel<sup>2</sup>; (3) indicate the port of loading and the port of discharge stated in the credit; (4) be the sole original bill of lading or non-negotiable sea waybill or the full set as so indicated; (5) contain all of the terms and conditions of carriage or if necessary refer to another source of documents; and (6) contain no indication that it is subject to a charter party<sup>3</sup>.

Unless transshipment<sup>4</sup> is prohibited by the terms of the credit, banks will accept a bill of lading or non-negotiable sea waybill which indicates that the goods will be transhipped, provided that the entire ocean carriage is covered by one and the same such document<sup>5</sup>. Transshipment may be permitted provided that the entire carriage is covered by one bill of lading or non-negotiable sea waybill, and even if the credit prohibits transshipment, a document will be acceptable if it indicates that transshipment will take place in containers, trailers or 'LASH' barges as evidenced by the document; clauses stating that the carrier reserves the right to tranship are to be disregarded<sup>6</sup>.

A charter party bill of lading must appear to: (a) be signed by or behalf of the master or his named agent, the owner or his named agent or the charterer or his named agent; (b) indicate that the goods have been loaded on board or shipped on a named vessel<sup>7</sup>; (c) indicate shipment from the port of loading and the port; (d) be the sole original bill of lading or the full set of such bills<sup>8</sup>. Banks will not examine such charter party contracts<sup>9</sup>.

It is essential that shipping documents so conform to accustomed shipping documents as to be reasonably and readily fit to pass current in commerce<sup>10</sup>. The documents must be in good merchantable order, so that, if the bank is not reimbursed, it has realisable documents from which it may reimburse itself<sup>11</sup>. The bill of lading must cover transit from the port of origin to the port of destination<sup>12</sup>. If the credit stipulates a particular time or date of shipment, the stipulation must be complied with<sup>13</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 Loading on board or shipment on a named vessel may be indicated by pre-printed wording on the bill of lading or non-negotiable sea waybill or by onboard notation with the relevant date: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) arts 20(a)(ii), 21(a)(ii); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) arts 23(a)(ii), 24(a)(ii). The provisions are generally similar but there are new formulations of the rules in regard to signature and transshipment. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

3 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) arts 20(a), 21(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) arts 23(a), 24(a). See note 2.

4 'Transshipment' refers to unloading and reloading from one vessel to another vessel during the course of carriage from the port of loading to the port of discharge stipulated in the credit: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) arts 20(b), 21(b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) arts 23(b), 24(b). There is a slight change in the wording: see note 2.

7 Loading on board or shipment on a named vessel may be indicated by pre-printed wording or onboard notation indicating the relevant date of shipment, and the date of issuance of the charter party bill of lading is deemed to be such date unless there is some contrary indication: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) arts 22(a)(ii); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 25(a)(iv). #### 941. 'On deck', 'shipper's load and count', name of consignor.

Banks will accept a transport document which contains a provision that the goods may be carried on deck, provided that it does not specifically state that they are or will be loaded on deck; bears a clause such as 'shipper's load and count' or 'said by shipper to contain'; or indicates as the consignor of the goods a party other than the beneficiary of the credit<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) arts 14(k), 20(a), (b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 31. The provisions are similar but with the 2007 Revision they have been reorganised and their application extended to all transport documents rather than only to those involving carriage by sea. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

942. Freight.

A transport document may have a reference whether by stamp or otherwise to charges additional to the freight<sup>1</sup>.

A transport document may be issued by any party other than a carrier, owner, master or charterer as long as the document meets other relevant requirements<sup>2</sup>.

1 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 26(c); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 33. The provisions are similar but the 2007 Revision version is much reduced in size and complexity. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 14(l); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 30. The 2007 Revision version is much shorter and simpler and is part of the radically reorganised art 14 on examination of documents which collects together in one place many of the previous general rules on compliance of documents: see also PARA 937. The other requirements referred to are those in other articles: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) arts 19-24. As to transport documents see PARA 939.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/D. DOCUMENTS/943. Clean transport documents.

943. Clean transport documents.

A bank will only accept a clean transport document which is one which bears no clause or notation expressly declaring a defective condition of the goods or packaging<sup>1</sup>. To render a bill of lading defective, the clause or notation must declare the defect to have existed at the time of shipment<sup>2</sup>.

1 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 27; and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 33. 32(a). The provisions are very similar in effect although the 2007 Revision version is shorter and simpler and also states that it is unnecessary that the word 'clean' actually appear on the document for it to be 'clean on board'. See generally PARA 925 note 1. Where bills of lading bore clauses which 'so dealt with the condition of the meat or with what the ship said as to the condition of the meat for shipment as to seriously affect its price and its acceptability', the bills were not clean: Westminster Bank Ltd v Banca Nazionale di Credito (1928) 31 Ll L Rep 306 at 311 per Roche J. See also National Bank of Egypt v Hannevig's Bank (1919) 1 Ll L Rep 69 at 70, CA, where Bankes LJ seemed to think that the position as to the acceptability of claused bills (ie bills bearing superimposed clauses) might depend upon the circumstances.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/D. DOCUMENTS/944. Insurance documents.

944. Insurance documents.

Insurance documents must appear to be issued and signed by insurance companies or underwriters, or their agents<sup>1</sup>. If there is more than one original, all the originals must be presented<sup>2</sup>. Cover notes issued by brokers will not be accepted<sup>3</sup>. Banks will accept an insurance policy in lieu of a certificate or a declaration under an open cover<sup>4</sup>.

Unless it is clear otherwise from the insurance document, the date of the document must be no later than the date of shipment<sup>5</sup>.

The amount of coverage must be indicated and be in the same currency as the credit<sup>6</sup>. There are reworded provisions on minimum cover<sup>7</sup>, including new provisions indicating that risks are covered at least between shipment and final destination<sup>8</sup>.

Credits must stipulate the type of insurance required and, if any, the additional risks which are to be covered<sup>9</sup>. An insurance document may indicate that the cover is subject to a franchise or an excess (deductible)<sup>10</sup>.

Where a credit stipulates insurance against 'all risks', banks must accept an insurance document which contains any 'all risks' notation or clause, whether or not under such a heading, without regard to any risk or risks being excluded<sup>11</sup>.

1 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 28(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 34(a). There are new provisions on signature in the 2007 Revision version and also on coverage, risks and exclusions. The 2007 Revision has a new amalgamated art 28 about what constitutes a complying insurance document but corresponds in general terms to arts 34-36 in the 1993 Revision version. See generally PARA 925 note 1. Where a credit called for an 'approved insurance policy', it was held that a certificate which failed to state the terms of insurance was deficient: Donald H Scott & Co Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd [1923] 2 KB 1, CA. 8 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 28(f)(iii). See note 1.

9 If imprecise terms such as 'usual risks' or 'customary risks' are used, banks must accept insurance documents without responsibility for any risks not being covered: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 28(g); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 35(a). See note 1. Cf the position at common law as illustrated by Borthwick v Bank of New Zealand (1900) 17 TLR 2 (policy to pay 'total loss by total loss of vessel only' held inadequate in view of custom in meat trade to tender 'all risks' insurance).

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/D. DOCUMENTS/945. Commercial invoices.

945. Commercial invoices.

Commercial invoices must appear to be issued by the beneficiary named in the credit<sup>1</sup>, must be made out in the name of the applicant, must be in the same currency as the credit, and need not be signed<sup>2</sup>. In certain specified circumstances a nominated or confirming bank may accept a commercial invoice and its decision is binding upon all parties, provided that the bank has not honoured or negotiated for an amount in excess of that permitted by the credit<sup>3</sup>. The description of the goods, service or performance in the commercial invoice must correspond with the description in the credit; but, in other documents, the goods may be described in general terms not conflicting with the description in the credit<sup>4</sup>. The wording of the description in the invoice must follow the words of the credit, and this is so even where the beneficiary uses an expression which, although different from the words of the credit, has, as between buyer and seller, the same meaning as such words<sup>5</sup>. There is, however, a real distinction between an identification of goods and a description of goods. The latitude in relation to other documents extends only to description, and, however general the description, the identification must be unequivocal<sup>6</sup>. A distinction exists between words of description and words relating to the condition of the described goods<sup>7</sup>.

Linkage between documents is not, as such, necessary provided that each directly or indirectly refers unequivocally to the goods<sup>8</sup>.

1 An exception is made in relation to transferable credit: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 38; the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 48; and PARA 935. As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 18(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 37(a). The 2007 Revision version of the provision covering commercial invoices (see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 14(e), (j), art 18) is similar despite some considerable reorganisation and the new added requirement that the invoice be in the same currency as the credit. See also note 4. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

3 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 28(b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 37(b). See note 3. As to the position at common law: see Donald H Scott & Co Ltd v Barclays Bank Ltd (1923) 28 Com Cas 253, CA, where it was suggested by Scrutton LJ at 263 that the tender is to be regarded as a request for collection so far as the excess is concerned.

4 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) arts 14(e), 18(c); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 37(c). Here there is a slight rewording with the 2007 Revision. See note 1. For an example see Soproma SpA v Marine & Animal By-Products Corp [1966] 1 Lloyd's Rep 367 at 389, decided under the similarly worded Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1962 Revision) art 33 (description of goods in bill of lading as 'Chilean Fishmeal' held sufficient under credit describing goods as 'Chilean Fish Full Meal'). See Re Reinhold & Co and Hansloh Arbitration (1896) 12 TLR 422, DC (certificate of quality which failed to mention that bags were marked with an 'F' held defective where bill of lading did refer to bags so marked); Rayner & Co Ltd v Hambros Bank Ltd [1943] KB 37, [1942] 2 All ER 694, CA (bill of lading covering 'machine-shelled ground-nut kernels' held defective under a credit calling for 'Coromandel ground nuts'); Bank Melli Iran v Barclays Bank (Dominion, Colonial and Overseas) [1951] 2 Lloyd's Rep 367 (certificate describing vehicles as 'in new condition' and 'new, good' held defective under credit calling for 'new' trucks); Netherlands Trading Society v Wayne and Haylitt Co, Chan Soon Fat (1952) 6 Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers 320, Hong Kong Sup Ct (bill of lading for '375 bales, gunny bags' held defective under credit calling for documents covering '375 bales, each containing 400 pieces New Indian Heavycee Bags . . .'). As to whether these cases would be decided in the same way under later revisions of the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits see the observations of Sir John Donaldson MR in Banque de l'Indochine et de Suez SA v JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd above at 732 and 1142-1143 (in relation to the provisions in the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1983 Revision)); and see also Soproma SpA v Marine & Animal By-Products Corp'n [1966] 1 Lloyd's Rep 367.

946. Other documents.

In the case of documents other than transport documents<sup>1</sup>, insurance documents<sup>2</sup> and commercial invoices<sup>3</sup>, to be acceptable the content of the credit<sup>4</sup> must appear to fulfil the document's function and not be in conflict with data in the document, any other document referred to or the credit itself<sup>5</sup>. In documents other than commercial invoices, goods, services or performance may be described in general terms not conflicting with the description in the credit<sup>6</sup>.

Previously if a credit called for an attestation or certification of weight in the case of transport other than by sea, banks had to accept a weight stamp or declaration of weight apparently superimposed on the transport document by the carrier or his agent unless the credit specifically stipulated that the attestation or certification of weight must be by means of a separate document<sup>7</sup>. A certificate by one expert is not sufficient where the credit calls for a certificate by 'experts'<sup>8</sup>. Where a credit calls for a certificate of inspection, the minimum requirement implicit in the ordinary meaning of the words is that the goods have been inspected, at any rate visually, by the person issuing the certificate. If it is intended that a particular method of inspection should be adopted or that particular information as to the result of the inspection should be recorded, this needs to be expressly stated<sup>9</sup>.

E. LIABILITIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES

948. Matters for which banks are not liable.

Banks assume no liability or responsibility:

- 38 (1) for such matters as the form, sufficiency, accuracy, genuineness, falsification or legal effect of any documents, or for the general and/or particular conditions stipulated in the documents or superimposed on them, or for such matters as the description, quantity, weight, quality, condition, packing, delivery, value or existence of the goods, services or other performance represented by any documents, or for the good faith or acts and/or omissions, solvency, performance

- or standing of the consignors, the carriers, the forwarders, the consignees or the insurers of the goods, or any other person<sup>1</sup>;
- 39 (2) for the consequences arising out of such matters as delay, loss in transit, mutilation or other errors arising in the transmission of any telecommunication, or for various errors in translation or interpretation of technical terms, and reserve the right to transmit credit terms without translating them<sup>2</sup>;
- 40 (3) for the consequences arising out of the interruption of their business by acts of God, riots, civil commotions, insurrections, wars or any other causes beyond their control, or by any strikes or lockouts<sup>3</sup>.

Banks using the services of another bank or banks to give effect to the instructions of the applicant for the credit do so for the account and at the latter's risk<sup>4</sup>. Banks assume no liability or responsibility should the instructions they transmit not be carried out by another bank<sup>5</sup>. A party instructing another party to perform services is liable for any charges incurred by the instructed party in connection with its instructions<sup>6</sup>. The applicant for the credit is bound by, and liable to indemnify the bank against, all obligations and responsibilities imposed by foreign laws and usages<sup>7</sup>.

949. Issuing and paying banks.

When a nominated bank (that is, the bank with which the credit<sup>1</sup> is available) decides that the presentation is in compliance and honours or negotiates, it must forward on the documents to the confirming bank (that is, the bank adding its confirmation to the credit) or the issuing bank (that is, the bank which issued the credit to start with)<sup>2</sup>.

If a credit states that reimbursement is to be obtained by a nominated bank (the 'claiming bank') claiming on another bank (the 'reimbursing bank'), the credit must state whether the reimbursement is subject to the rules on bank-to-bank reimbursements<sup>3</sup> in effect on the issuance date of the credit; and if the credit does not so state other rules apply<sup>4</sup>. An issuing bank is not relieved from any of its obligations to provide reimbursement itself if and when reimbursement is not made by the reimbursing bank<sup>5</sup>. The issuing bank is responsible to the claiming bank for any loss of interest in the event that reimbursement is not provided on first demand by the reimbursing bank in accordance with the credit<sup>6</sup>. Generally the reimbursing bank's charges are for the account of the issuing bank<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 15(c). This is new but follows on from the corresponding provision in the 1993 Revision (see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 14(a)) that the obligation of the issuer or confirming bank to reimburse a nominated bank is conditional on the complying documents being forwarded to the issuing bank or confirming bank. As to examination and rejection of documents see PARA 953. As to the obligation to reimburse see Co-operative Centrale Raiffeisen-Boerenleenbank BA v Sumitomo Bank Ltd [1987] 1 Lloyd's Rep 345 at 348; appeal allowed in part without affecting this point [1988] 2 Lloyd's Rep 250, CA.

4 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 13(a), (b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 19(a), (b). The 2007 Revision version has been modified and expanded to recognise the International Chamber of Commerce's Rules for Bank-to-Bank reimbursements (see note 3) although where there is no such reference to these rules the provisions are similar to those under the 1993 Revision. As to such other rules see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 13(b)(i)-(iv).

7 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 13(b)(iv); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 19(e). The provisions are similar and there are also similar terms where the charges are for the account of another party. See note 4.

950. Credit stipulating state of fact but no document.

Under the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits, if a credit<sup>1</sup> contains conditions without stating the document or documents to be presented in compliance with the credit, banks deem such conditions as not stated and must disregard them<sup>2</sup>.

This differs from the position at common law, which is that where a credit stipulates a state of fact but fails to specify a document or documents to be presented, the paying bank has to be satisfied of that fact and is entitled to insist upon reasonable documentary proof to establish its existence<sup>3</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 14(h); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 13(c). See also PARA 953. The provisions are very similar and the 2007 Revision version is part of the new reorganised article on general rules regarding compliance of documents: see also PARA 937. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/E. LIABILITIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES/951. Ambiguity in the credit.

951. Ambiguity in the credit.

If the instructions given by the customer to the issuing bank as to documents to be tendered by the beneficiary are ambiguous or are capable of covering more than one kind of document, the bank is not in default if it acts upon a reasonable meaning of the ambiguous expression or accepts any kind of document which fairly falls within the wide description used<sup>1</sup>. The reason for this is that banks have to make quick decisions as to whether a document complies with the requirements of a credit at the risk of incurring liability to one or other of the parties to the transaction if the decision is wrong<sup>2</sup>. There are, however, limits to the operation of this principle, namely: (1) once a person enters into a contract, he is bound by its terms, which, in the event of dispute, will fall to be construed objectively; (2) a party relying on his own interpretation of the relevant instrument must have acted reasonably in all the circumstances in so doing, and, if the ambiguity is patent on the face of the document, it may well be right, especially with the facilities of modern communications, for an agent to have his instructions clarified by his principal, if time permits, before acting on them<sup>3</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/E. LIABILITIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES/952. Documents to be examined with reasonable care.

952. Documents to be examined with reasonable care.

Banks must examine all documents referred to in the credit<sup>1</sup> with reasonable care to ascertain whether or not they appear to be in compliance with the terms and conditions of the credit<sup>2</sup>. Documents not required by the credit will be returned to the presenter<sup>3</sup>. Although data in the document when read with the document and international standard banking practice need not be identical it must not be in conflict with such data, the credit or any other documents referred to<sup>4</sup>. The duty is owed by the issuing bank to its customer and perhaps by a bank authorised to pay, accept or negotiate to the issuing bank; but the duty is not owed to the beneficiary<sup>5</sup>. If the documents do not appear on their face to be in accordance with the credit, the beneficiary is not entitled to be paid<sup>6</sup> and the paying bank is not entitled to be reimbursed if it does pay<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 14(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 19(a), (b) art 13(a). See further PARA 953. The 2007 Revision version is similar (although it uses the phrase 'on the basis of the documents alone' while the 1993 Revision version uses the phrase 'on their face' in reference to the documents: but see also art 14(b); and PARA 953) and is part of the new reorganised article on general rules regarding compliance of documents: see also PARA 937. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/E. LIABILITIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES/953. Examination and rejection of documents.

953. Examination and rejection of documents.

The issuing bank, the confirming bank, if any, or a nominated bank, must determine on the basis of the documents alone whether or not they appear on their face to be in compliance with the credit<sup>1</sup>.

The issuing bank, the confirming bank, if any, or a nominated bank acting on its nomination, each have a certain time following the receipt of the documents, within which to determine compliance<sup>2</sup>. In the event of refusal to honour or negotiate the issuing bank, the confirming bank, if any, or a nominated bank acting on its nomination must give the relevant notice to that effect by telecommunication or, if that is not possible, by other expeditious means within a certain time<sup>3</sup>. The issuing bank or confirming bank, if any, is then entitled to claim from the remitting bank refund, with interest, of any reimbursement which may have been made to that bank<sup>4</sup>. The disposal notice is not required to use a precise form of words; it suffices that it is made clear that the documents are not being accepted<sup>5</sup>.

If the issuing bank or confirming bank fails to act in accordance with the provisions described above<sup>6</sup> then it is precluded from claiming that the documents are not in compliance<sup>7</sup>.

1 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 14(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 14(b). As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2. The wording of the two provisions is different but the effect is similar. See also Bankers Trust Co v State Bank of India [1991] 1 Lloyd's Rep 587; affd [1991] 2 Lloyd's Rep 443, CA. If the issuing bank determines that the documents are not in compliance, it may in its sole judgment approach the applicant for a waiver of the discrepancies: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 16(b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 14(c). This does not extend the relevant period: see the text and note 2. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 14(b); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 13(b). While the 1993 Revision version refers to 'a reasonable time not to exceed seven banking days' following receipt the 2007 Revision version provides instead for 'a maximum of five banking days following the day of presentation' which is not affected by any subsequent expiry date or last day for presentation. Although the bank has a reasonable time (ie under the 1993 Revision version), it must act promptly: see Hansson v Hamel and Horley Ltd [1922] 2 AC 36 at 46, HL, per Lord Sumner; Banque de l'Indochine et de Suez SA v JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd [1983] QB 711 at 730, [1983] 1 All ER 1137 at 1141, CA, per Sir John Donaldson MR; cf Bank Melli Iran v Barclays (Dominion, Colonial and Overseas) [1951] 2 Lloyd's Rep 367. As to what may amount to a reasonable time see Bankers Trust Co v State Bank of India [1991] 1 Lloyd's Rep 587; affd [1991] 2 Lloyd's Rep 443, CA.

3 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 16(c), (d), (e); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 14(d)(i), (ii). The 2007 Revision version refers to the notice needing to be received no later than the close of the fifth banking day following the day of presentation while the 1993 Revision version refers to such notice needing to be received without delay but no later than the close of the seventh banking day after receipt of the documents. In addition there has been considerable further modification with the 2007 Revision particularly in regard to what must be stated in the notice. Where a senior official of the beneficiary under whose aegis documents are presented is present at the bank to receive notice, a term has to be implied that notice can then and there be given in person rather than electronically: Seaconsar Far East Ltd v Bank Markazi Jomhouri Islami Iran [1999] 1 Lloyd's Rep 36, CA. 4 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 16(g); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 14(d)(iii). The provisions appear to be similar in both wording and effect.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/E. LIABILITIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES/954. Estoppel, waiver and ratification.

954. Estoppel, waiver and ratification.

The provisions relating to examination and rejection of documents<sup>1</sup> provide an estoppel against a bank which fails to act in accordance with them, and/or fails to hold the documents at the disposal of, or to return them to, the presenter. An estoppel may also arise between the beneficiary and the confirming or issuing bank<sup>2</sup>, or between a bank authorised to pay and the issuing bank<sup>3</sup>.

Under the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits, a rejection notice must state all the discrepancies in respect of which the bank refuses the documents<sup>4</sup>. It follows that a bank cannot subsequently rely on a discrepancy which was not stated in its rejection notice. This differs from the position at common law, which is that the mere statement of a particular reason or reasons for rejecting documents is not alone enough to found a representation, waiver or promissory estoppel in relation to reasons not so stated<sup>5</sup>. A bank is entitled to rely upon a ground of rejection not relied upon at the time of rejection even where the ground actually relied upon is subsequently abandoned, although in such a case the bank lacks the practical support which it can derive from an actual rejection on the ground relied upon<sup>6</sup>.

Where a discrepancy is waived, the position appears to be just as if the document tendered had always conformed with the credit<sup>7</sup>.

Unreasonable delay by the issuing bank or the beneficiary may amount to ratification<sup>8</sup>.

955. Forged documents.

Banks assume no liability or responsibility for, inter alia, the accuracy, genuineness or falsification of any documents<sup>1</sup>. Accordingly, a bank is entitled to reimbursement where it pays against an inaccurate or forged document which appears on its face to be in accordance with the terms and conditions of the credit<sup>2</sup>. In the absence of fraud on the part of the beneficiary<sup>3</sup>, the obligation to take up apparently conforming documents exists even where at the time of presentation the documents are known by the beneficiary or the bank to be inaccurate or forged<sup>4</sup>. The beneficiary does not warrant to the paying bank the genuineness of third party documents tendered<sup>5</sup>. If a banker has given his acceptance to a draft, he is liable to a holder in due course notwithstanding the subsequent discovery of fraud<sup>6</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/E. LIABILITIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES/956. Payment under reserve or against indemnity.

956. Payment under reserve or against indemnity.

It commonly happens that documents tendered by the beneficiary are alleged by the confirming bank to contain discrepancies<sup>1</sup>. In such an event, a number of procedures are available: (1) the beneficiary may request the applicant to waive the discrepancies before the documents are remitted to the issuing bank; (2) the beneficiary may request an amendment to the credit; (3) the confirming bank may pay the beneficiary under reserve or against an indemnity in respect of specified discrepancies, whereupon the documents are forwarded to the issuing bank in the hope or expectation that they will be taken up<sup>2</sup>.

Payment under reserve creates a contract by which, in consideration for payment by the confirming bank, the beneficiary agrees to repay on demand in the event that the issuing bank rejects the documents in reliance upon some or all of the identified discrepancies<sup>3</sup>. Where payment is made against an indemnity, the indemnity will normally be contained in an undertaking by the beneficiary to be fully responsible for the discrepancies<sup>4</sup>.

If the remitting bank draws the attention of the issuing bank or the confirming bank, if any, to the discrepancies in the documents or advises such banks that it has paid, incurred a deferred payment undertaking, accepted drafts or negotiated under reserve or against an indemnity in respect of such discrepancies, the issuing bank or confirming bank is not thereby relieved from any of its obligations regarding the examination and rejection of documents<sup>5</sup>; such reserve or indemnity concerns only the relations between the remitting bank and the party towards whom the reserve was made, or from whom, or on whose behalf, the indemnity was obtained<sup>6</sup>. Where the issuing bank fails within a reasonable time to examine the documents and to determine whether to claim that payment, acceptance or negotiation was not effected in accordance with the terms and conditions of the credit, the cause of any loss suffered by the confirming bank by way of financing costs in respect of such delay is the issuing bank's breach of its obligations, and such loss will generally not be recoverable under the beneficiary's indemnity in respect of discrepancies<sup>7</sup>.

Whether the confirming bank may demand payment in the event that the issuing bank rejects the documents in reliance upon discrepancies not identified by the confirming bank is undecided<sup>8</sup>.

1 In Banque de l'Indochine et de Suez SA v JH Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd [1983] QB 711 at 733, [1983] 1 All ER 1137 at 1144, CA, it appeared from expert evidence at the trial that as many as two-thirds of presentations of documents against confirmed credits in London are thought to be discrepant.

2 It is important from the beneficiary's standpoint that the discrepancies be identified in order to prevent the repayment obligation being open-ended.

6 Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 14(f). There is no equivalent to art 14(f) in the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) although it seems that this omission would not affect any obligation to pay by the issuer or confirmer in regard to documents appearing to comply with the credit.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/E. LIABILITIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES/957. Acceptance and non-acceptance of the bill.

957. Acceptance and non-acceptance of the bill.

On the bank's accepting the bill and the documents coming to its hands, it acquires a pledge and lien over and qualified property in the goods they represent<sup>1</sup>. What it does with the documents of title depends on its relation or arrangement with its customer (that is, the buyer) but, if it has to pay the acceptance, it may, if necessary, realise the goods; but it is advisable to apply to the customer for reimbursement and to give him notice of intention to sell if the application is not complied with<sup>2</sup>. In the absence of special agreement, the bank is not, however, entitled to sell before the due date in order to put itself in funds to meet the bill<sup>3</sup>. The statement on the face of a bill that it is drawn against specific cargo, goods, or credit, however minutely the same may be described, does not, without the documents of title, create any charge over or claim to the goods in favour of a holder in the event of the dishonour of the bill<sup>4</sup>. Nor would it appear that such a statement on the bill conveys to the acceptor any right over the goods apart from the documents of title<sup>5</sup>.

A bank which has accepted documentary bills is in no sense a trustee for the holder of the bills with respect to the goods or documents of title, and the bill holders have no right to question the bank's dealing with such goods or securities<sup>6</sup>.

If the issuing bank accepts the bill drawn by the seller or other beneficiary of the credit on the drawer's undertaking to forward bills of lading (which would be rare), the bank acquires an equitable claim to the bills of lading, valid against the customer's trustee in bankruptcy, but not against a third person who took them in good faith, and for value<sup>7</sup>.

If the bank does not accept a bill of exchange drawn under the credit, it has no right to retain any documents, and no property in the goods represented by them passes to him<sup>8</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/E. LIABILITIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES/958. The fraud exception.

958. The fraud exception.

The obligation of the confirming bank to the seller under a confirmed credit to pay against documents which appear on their face to be in accordance with its terms and conditions is subject to one established exception, that is to say, where the seller, for the purpose of drawing on the credit, fraudulently presents to the confirming bank<sup>1</sup> documents that contain, expressly or by implication, material representations of fact that to his knowledge are untrue<sup>2</sup>. The fraud must be that of the beneficiary<sup>3</sup>, but where it is, and the bank knows that the documents are forged or fraudulent, the bank is entitled to refuse payment if it finds out before payment, and to recover the money as paid under a mistake if it finds out after payment<sup>4</sup>. The principle also applies to performance bonds<sup>5</sup>.

The fraud must be clearly established, both as to the fact and as to the bank's knowledge, and it would not normally be sufficient that this rests upon the uncorroborated statement of the customer<sup>6</sup>. The court will generally expect the beneficiary to have been given an opportunity to answer the allegation of fraud and to have failed to provide any adequate answer in circumstances where one could be properly expected<sup>7</sup>. The bank's knowledge must be shown to exist prior to payment to the beneficiary<sup>8</sup>.

The exception for fraud on the part of the beneficiary is a clear application of the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio (fraud unravels all) and the courts will not allow their process to be used by a dishonest person to carry out a fraud<sup>9</sup>.

1 In principle, the exception must also apply where documents are fraudulently presented to the issuing bank.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/E. LIABILITIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES/959. Restraint of payment and drawing.

959. Restraint of payment and drawing.

The court will ordinarily<sup>1</sup> not grant an injunction to restrain payment under a letter of credit or a performance bond. Where such an application is made, the court should ask itself whether there is any challenge to the validity of the letter or bond itself. If there is not or if the challenge is not substantial, prima facie no injunction should be granted and the bank should be left free to honour its contractual obligation, although restrictions may well be imposed upon the freedom of the beneficiary to deal with the money after he has received it. The wholly exceptional case where an injunction may be granted is where the fraud exception is made out<sup>2</sup>.

On an application for relief based upon the fraud exception, what has to be established is a good arguable case that the only realistic inference is fraud<sup>3</sup>. Even then the application may fail on the ground that the cause of action is tenuous<sup>4</sup> or that the balance of convenience weighs against the granting of an injunction<sup>5</sup>. An order made without notice restraining the beneficiary from drawing on the credit may be discharged on the application of the bank<sup>6</sup>.

The court will not recognise the order of a foreign court restraining payment under a letter of credit on the application of the buyer where the foreign court, applying a law which is not the proper law of the credit, has made a restraining order contrary to the principles described above<sup>7</sup>.

The Court of Appeal has granted an injunction to restrain beneficiaries from drawing on a demand guarantee<sup>8</sup>.

960. Damages on breach of contract.

Where a banker is liable for breach of contract to pay under a credit, the measure of damages is in principle that which it could reasonably have been foreseen would flow<sup>1</sup> from the breach<sup>2</sup>. They are not simply the damages for non-payment of money<sup>3</sup>. However, special considerations, unless known to him or which he ought to have known, will not give rise to special damages for the damage which may flow from them<sup>4</sup>.

In principle, the beneficiary must take reasonable steps to mitigate his loss, but there are statements to the contrary<sup>5</sup>.

1 See on the basis of the decision in Hadley v Baxendale (1854) 9 Exch 341; cf Victoria Laundry (Windsor) Ltd v Newman Industries Ltd [1949] 2 KB 528, [1949] 1 All ER 997, CA. See DAMAGES vol 12(1) (Reissue) PARA 941 et seq.

F. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

961. Quantity and amount.

Such words or expressions as 'about', 'approximately', 'circa' used in connection with the amount of the credit<sup>1</sup> or the quantity or the unit price stated in the credit are to be construed as allowing a difference not to exceed ten per cent more or ten per cent less than the relevant amount or quantity or unit price<sup>2</sup>.

A tolerance of five per cent more or five per cent less is permissible in the quantity of goods referred to, provided that the amount of the drawings does not exceed the amount of the credit and that this tolerance does not apply when the credit states the quantity in terms of a particular number of packing units or individual items<sup>3</sup>. Even when partial shipments are not permitted, a tolerance of five per cent less in the amount of the drawing is allowed, provided that if the credit states the quantity of the goods, such quantity of goods is shipped in full, and if the credit stipulates a unit price, such price is not reduced<sup>4</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 30(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 39(a). ### 962. Partial and instalment drawings and shipments.

Partial drawings or shipments are permitted<sup>1</sup>.

Transport documents which appear to indicate that shipment has been made on the same means of conveyance and for the same journey, provided they indicate the same destination, will not be regarded as covering partial shipments, even if the transport documents indicate different dates of shipment or different ports of loading, places of taking in charge, or despatch<sup>2</sup>.

Shipments made by post or by courier are not to be regarded as partial shipments if the relevant receipts, certificates or dispatch notes appear to have been stamped, signed by the same courier or postal service at the same place and date and for the same ultimate destination<sup>3</sup>.

If drawings or shipments by instalments within given periods are stated in the credit<sup>4</sup> and any instalment is not drawn or shipped within the period allowed, the credit ceases to be available for that and any subsequent instalments<sup>5</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/F. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS/963. Expiry date and place for presentation of documents.

963. Expiry date and place for presentation of documents.

All credits<sup>1</sup> must state an expiry date (and an expiry date stated for honour or negotiation is deemed an expiry date for presentation) and a place for presentation of documents<sup>2</sup>; and, except as provided below<sup>3</sup>, documents must be presented on or before such expiry date<sup>4</sup>. If an issuing bank states that the credit is to be available 'for one month', or for other such set periods, but does not specify the date from which the time is to run, the date of issue of the credit by the issuing bank is deemed to be the first day from which such time is to run<sup>5</sup>.

It frequently happens that the validity of a credit is extended by consent of all parties; and such consent may be implied from the tender and acceptance of documents after the expiry date<sup>6</sup>.

In addition to stipulating an expiry date for presentation of documents, every credit which calls for transport documents must also stipulate a specified period of time after the date of shipment<sup>7</sup> during which presentation must be made in compliance with the terms and conditions of the credit. If no such period of time is stipulated, banks must refuse documents presented to them later than 21 days after the date of shipment. In every case, however, documents must be presented not later than the expiry date of the credit<sup>8</sup>.

If the expiry date of the credit or the last day for presentation falls on a day on which the bank to which presentation has to be made is closed for reasons other than those of force majeure<sup>9</sup>, the expiry date or the last day for presentation of documents, as the case may be, is extended to the first following banking day<sup>10</sup>. The bank to which presentation is made on such first following business day must provide a statement that the documents were presented within the time limits extended in accordance with the above provisions<sup>11</sup>.

Banks are under no obligation to accept presentation of documents outside banking hours<sup>12</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

2 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 6(d); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 42(a). As to dating and date terms see PARA 965. The provisions are similar although the 2007 Revision version is expanded to restate a fundamental principle that a beneficiary can always make presentation to the issuer at the place where it issued the credit. See generally PARA 925 note 1.

3 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 29(a); the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 44(a); and the text to notes 9-10.

4 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 6(e); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 42(b). The provisions are similar. Where a letter of credit provides for documents 'to be accepted as presented', the time condition for presentation must still be complied with: Credit Agricole Indosuez v Credit Suisse First Boston (Zurich) [2001] 1 All ER (Comm) 1088.

5 Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 42(c). This way of indicating an expiry date was specifically discouraged in the 1993 Revision version and there appears to be no equivalent to art 42(c) in the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision).

6 Co-operative Centrale Raiffesisen-Boerenleen Bank BA v Sumitomo Bank Ltd [1988] 2 Lloyd's Rep 250, CA.

7 In cases in which the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 40(b) applies (see PARA 962), the date of shipment will be considered to be the latest shipment date on any of the transport documents presented: art 43(b). As to the meaning of 'shipment' see PARA 964. There appears to be no equivalent to art 43(b) in the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision).

8 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 14(c); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 43(a). The provisions are in similar terms on this point but see note 7.

9 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 36; the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 17; and PARA 948.

10 See the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 29(a); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 44(a). The latest date for shipment is not extended as a result: see the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (2007 Revision) art 29(c); and the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1993 Revision) art 44(b). These provisions are broadly similar.

964. Shipment.

Unless otherwise stipulated in the credit<sup>1</sup>, the expression 'shipment' used in stipulating an earliest or a latest shipment date is to be understood to include such expressions as 'loading on board', 'dispatch', 'accepted for carriage', 'date of post receipt', 'date of pick-up', and, in the case of a credit calling for a multimodal transport document, to include the expression 'taking in charge'<sup>2</sup>. The use of such expressions as 'prompt', 'immediately', 'as soon as possible' should not be used; and if used will be disregarded<sup>3</sup>. If such expressions as 'on or about' are used, they are interpreted as a stipulation that an event is to take place during the period from five days before to five days after the specified date, both such dates to be included<sup>4</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'credit' see PARA 925 note 2.

965. Dating and date terms.

A document may be dated before the issuance date of the credit<sup>1</sup>, but not later than its date of presentation<sup>2</sup>.

Such words as 'to', 'until', 'till', 'from' referring to a period of shipment include the date mentioned; and the words 'before' and 'after' exclude such date<sup>3</sup>.

The terms 'first half' and 'second half' of a month are construed respectively as the first to the fifteenth, and the sixteenth to the last day of such month, inclusive<sup>4</sup>. The terms 'beginning', 'middle' or 'end' of a month are construed respectively as from the first to the tenth, the eleventh to the twentieth and the twenty-first to the last day of such month, inclusive<sup>5</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xi) Letters of Credit; Performance Bonds/F. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS/966. Proper law.

966. Proper law.

Where a letter of credit contains no express provision as to its proper law, the law applicable is the law with which the transaction has its closest and most real connection<sup>1</sup>. This will ordinarily be the law of the territory in which the seller's draft is to be presented to the banker for acceptance or payment<sup>2</sup>. A debt under a letter of credit is situated in the place where it is in fact payable against documents<sup>3</sup>.

(xii) Lending and Security

967. Lending by way of overdraft.

A customer may borrow from a bank by way of a loan or by way of overdraft. A loan is a matter of special agreement. In the absence of agreement, express or implied from a course of business, a bank is not bound to allow his customer to overdraw<sup>1</sup>. An agreement for an overdraft must be supported by good consideration<sup>2</sup>, and it may be express or implied<sup>3</sup>.

Drawing a cheque or accepting a bill payable at a bank where there are not funds sufficient to meet it amounts to a request for an overdraft<sup>4</sup>.

Circumstances may justify a bank in withdrawing the right to overdraw: Parkinson v Wakefield & Co (1889) 5 TLR 646, CA (security disturbed by customer). In practice, it would be difficult to establish an implied agreement because the modern practice is to record in an overdraft facility letter the terms on which an overdraft is granted.

968. Interest.

By the universal custom of bankers, a banker has the right to charge simple interest at a reasonable rate on all overdrafts<sup>1</sup>. An unusual rate of interest can be justified, in the absence of express agreement, only where the customer is shown or must be taken to have agreed to the account being kept on that basis<sup>2</sup>. A customer who requests an overdraft impliedly consents to pay the bank's usual overdraft rate of interest<sup>3</sup>.

An implied term entitling a bank to charge interest is not restricted to accounts which are current for mutual transactions, nor is it terminated by a bank's demand for repayment, the commencement of legal proceedings, or the closing of the account<sup>4</sup>.

The taking of a mortgage to secure a fluctuating balance of an overdrawn account, is not, however, inconsistent with the relation of banker and customer, so as to displace a previously accrued right to charge compound interest<sup>5</sup>.

It is the practice of bankers to debit accrued interest to the borrower's current account at regular periods; where the current account is overdrawn or becomes overdrawn as the result of the debit, the effect is to add the interest to the principal, in which case it loses its quality of interest and becomes capital<sup>6</sup>.

969. Charges, commissions and costs.

The right of a banker to charges and commissions would seem, in the absence of an express agreement by the customer to pay them, to depend on the universal custom of bankers, as in the case of his right to charge interest on overdrafts<sup>1</sup>. It is doubtful whether the right can be based on acquiescence in the charges and commissions as disclosed in the bank statement, in view of the doubts cast on the existence of any obligation on the part of the customer to examine his bank statement<sup>2</sup>.

It is common for a bank's security documentation to contain an express provision for the payment of all costs, charges and expenses incurred by the bank in enforcing or obtaining payment of sums due to it. Such a provision does not oust the court's discretion as to costs, but, in exercising that discretion, the court starts from the position that the parties have contracted for payment of the bank's costs on an indemnity basis<sup>3</sup>.

Bank charges which were allegedly excessive were challenged by the Office of Fair Trading<sup>4</sup> in early 2008. Where a charge is made following a default, the charge may be unenforceable as a penalty unless it is a reasonable pre-estimate of the bank's likely loss as a result of the increased credit risk<sup>5</sup>.

1 See PARA 968.

2 See PARA 874. Furthermore, in National Bank of Greece v Pinios Shipping Co [1990] 1 AC 637 at 675, [1990] 1 All ER 78 at 82, HL, per Lord Goff of Chieveley, it was noted that resort to supposed acquiescence in the context of a bank's right to interest was an agreeable fiction whose only function had been to circumvent the usury laws, and that once the usury laws were repealed in 1854, there was no sensible basis on which the fiction should have been allowed to survive.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xii) Lending and Security/970. Relation between bank and party giving security.

970. Relation between bank and party giving security.

Banks must be on inquiry as to whether a third party giving security has been improperly influenced whenever there is a non-commercial relationship between the bank's customer and the third party<sup>1</sup>. The principle rarely, if ever, applies in a commercial relationship as those engaged in business can be regarded as capable of looking after themselves and understanding the risks involved in the giving of security<sup>2</sup>.

A bank is always on inquiry when a wife provides security for her husband's debts or vice versa, or where the bank is aware of a relationship between the parties, either heterosexual or homosexual<sup>3</sup>. The bank must also be on inquiry where a person in such a relationship becomes surety for the debts of a company in which the other person has an interest, even if the person providing security is a shareholder, director or secretary of the company<sup>4</sup>. Once a bank has been put on inquiry it must take steps to bring home to the wife or other third party the risk she is running by standing as surety and advise her or him to take independent advice<sup>5</sup>. A bank can rely on confirmation from a solicitor acting for the wife or other third party that he has advised her or him appropriately<sup>6</sup>. Where a bank is relying on confirmation from a solicitor that it has advised a third party as to risk the bank is entitled to proceed on the assumption that the solicitor has done his job properly unless the bank knows that this is not the case<sup>7</sup>.

On the general law of agency, a bank which instructs an agent to obtain security for it is liable for any fraudulent misrepresentation made by the agent in achieving that end, including any continuing misrepresentation made earlier and not corrected<sup>8</sup> and also, presumably, any innocent misrepresentation.

1 As to the equitable doctrine of undue influence see CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARAS 712-716; MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD vol 31 (2003 Reissue) PARAS 839-853. The doctrine has been defined as the unconscientious use by one person of power possessed by him over another in order to induce the other to enter into a contract: see CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 712. Where a person's consent is procured by undue influence the person is not bound by the agreement: see CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 715.

971. Effect of mortgage.

The position of a banker taking a mortgage does not differ from that of any other mortgagee<sup>1</sup>. The taking of a legal mortgage for a definite amount may terminate the relationship of banker and customer as to that amount<sup>2</sup>. Where, however, a mortgage is taken to secure a floating balance, the relation of banker and customer still continues<sup>3</sup>. In taking security over a fund in court or subject to litigation, bankers are deemed to have notice, if they know a claim is pending, of the possible rights of solicitors to charging orders on, for example, the claimant's interest; and, if a charging order is made, it will ordinarily have priority to the bank's charge<sup>4</sup>.

The merger of a simple contract debt into a specialty debt depends on the intention of the parties, to be gathered from the documents they have signed. Where a person owes an existing simple contract debt and gives security for it and a charge on his property, then the simple contract debt is merged in the specialty unless there is express provision to the contrary. When, however, security is given for payment of amounts due, or to become due, on a running account, the doctrine of merger, if it applies at all, would at most apply only to the indebtedness which existed at the date when the security was taken and the charge given<sup>5</sup>.

Where a bank chooses to advise a customer as to the nature and effect of a mortgage in its favour prior to the customer executing the mortgage, the bank owes a contractual duty to exercise reasonable skill and care in so doing<sup>6</sup>.

5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/3. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xii) Lending and Security/972. Further advances secured on unregistered land.

972. Further advances secured on unregistered land.

A banker holding a mortgage, whether or not made expressly for securing advances, may make further advances to rank in priority to subsequent mortgages, whether legal or equitable: (1) if an arrangement has been made to that effect with subsequent mortgagees<sup>1</sup>; (2) if he has had no notice<sup>2</sup> of such subsequent mortgages at the time when the further advance was made by him<sup>3</sup>; or (3) whether he has had such notice or not, where the mortgage imposes on the banker an obligation to make such further advances<sup>4</sup>. In the case of a mortgage made expressly for securing a current account or further advances, the banker is, in relation to the making of further advances, not deemed to have notice of a mortgage merely by reason that it was registered as a land charge if it was not so registered at the time when the original mortgage was created or when the last search, if any, by or on behalf of the banker was made, whichever last happened<sup>5</sup>. Subject to this, subsequent advances will be postponed to the later mortgage of which the banker has notice<sup>6</sup>. Specific performance will not be decreed of an agreement to make a loan<sup>7</sup>.

973. Further advances secured on registered land.

As regards registered land, registered charges on the same registered estate, or on the same registered charge, are to be taken to rank as between themselves in the order shown in the register and not according to the order in which they are created<sup>1</sup>. A banker may make a further advance on the security of the charge ranking in priority to a subsequent charge if: (1) he has not received from the subsequent chargee notice of the creation of the subsequent charge; (2) the advance is made in pursuance of an obligation and at the time of the creation of the subsequent charge the obligation was entered in the register; and (3) the parties to the prior charge have agreed a maximum amount for which the charge is security and at the time of the creation of the subsequent charge the agreement was entered in the register<sup>2</sup>.

1 See the Land Registration Act 2002 s 48; and LAND REGISTRATION vol 26 (2004 Reissue) PARA 944. In the case of the creation of a charge, the chargee, or his successor in title, must be entered in the register as the proprietor of the charge: see s 27, Sch 2; and LAND REGISTRATION vol 26 (2004 Reissue) PARA 911 et seq.

974. Change of parties.

A security may cease to be effectual as cover for future advances by reason of a change in the personality of the borrower, such as a change in the constitution of a firm<sup>1</sup>.

1 Royal Bank of Scotland v Christie (1840) 8 Cl & Fin 214; Re Laurence, ex p M'Kenna, City Bank Case (1861) 3 De GF & J 629 (where a person deposited title deeds for advances to be made to him, and it was held that the security did not cover advances made to him and others whom he took into partnership). If securities are deposited with a partnership or other unincorporated association for advances made by it, any change in the constitution of that organisation, such as the retirement of one partner and admission of another, would render the securities ineffective as cover for future advances: Ex p Kensington (1813) 2 Ves & B 79 at 83. As to partnerships generally see PARTNERSHIP.

975. Deposit by partner.

A partner has implied authority to deposit title deeds of property, whether real or personal, belonging to the firm, as security for advances to the firm; and, when the partnership is terminated by the death of the last surviving partner but one, the banker is entitled to treat a subsequent deposit of such deeds as being in the course of winding up the partnership affairs and so legitimate<sup>1</sup>.

1 Re Bourne, Bourne v Bourne [1906] 2 Ch 427, CA. See PARTNERSHIP vol 79 (2008) PARA 52. Note that, in consequence of the Law of Property (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1989 s 2(1), a mere deposit of title deeds does not create an equitable mortgage: see MORTGAGE vol 77 (2010) PARA 125 et seq.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xii) Lending and Security/976. Deposit of negotiable securities.

976. Deposit of negotiable securities.

Where a banker takes in good faith fully negotiable securities<sup>1</sup> as cover for an advance or overdraft, he is entitled to retain them until his debt is satisfied, notwithstanding that the borrower had no property in, and was wrongfully dealing with, the securities<sup>2</sup>. Knowledge that the customer is a stockbroker or occupies a fiduciary position, and that the securities may possibly not be his own, does not put the banker on inquiry, if he has no reason to doubt the honesty of the person tendering them as security, and the latter purports to deal with them as his own property<sup>3</sup>.

Where the banker takes fully negotiable securities in the above circumstances, he is entitled either to have them redeemed by the true owner, or to satisfy his advances by means of them on default, or, where no time is fixed for repayment, on giving reasonable notice to the depositor<sup>4</sup>.

977. Deposit by agent.

If a principal entrusts his agent with securities which, though not fully negotiable, purport on the face of them to convey all rights by mere transfer, especially if he holds out the agent as clothed with authority to transfer them as negotiable, the principal will be estopped from disputing the title of a banker who has taken the securities in good faith and for value from the agent, though the agent is acting for his own ends and in fraud of his principal<sup>1</sup>. In each case, the test is whether the possession by the agent and the terms of the document combined amount to a representation that the agent is invested with disposing power of a professedly negotiable instrument<sup>2</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xii) Lending and Security/978. Security by transfer or deposit.

978. Security by transfer or deposit.

Stock and shares may be utilised as security by transferring them to the banker or by merely depositing the relevant certificates<sup>1</sup>. The method of transfer depends on the nature of the stock or shares. In order to avoid the danger that the person transferring may be in a fiduciary position and not the beneficial owner, it is essential that the banker should not only take the stock or shares bona fide and for value, but also acquire the legal estate by registration<sup>2</sup>.

1 See PARA 982.

2 As to the effect of notice of the trust on the part of the person who takes a transfer of the legal estate see Bank of Montreal v Sweeney (1887) 12 App Cas 617, PC; and contrast Bentinck v London Joint Stock Bank [1893] 2 Ch 120. As to registration see PARA 979.

979. Registration.

In addition to actual transfer, registration in the register kept by the registrar of stocks and shares transferred is necessary to render the banker's title indefeasible or good against parties other than the pledgor who have beneficial interests in them<sup>1</sup>, or, failing registration, the transferee must have acquired a present absolute and unconditional right to be registered before he is affected with notice of the prior equitable title<sup>2</sup>. Registration does not, however, perfect a transfer which is in itself inoperative<sup>3</sup>.

980. Blank transfers.

Where stock or shares may be transferred only by deed<sup>1</sup>, a blank transfer will not be effective to pass the legal title<sup>2</sup>. Such a transfer may be validated by redelivery after the blanks are filled up, but an agent cannot effect the delivery unless himself authorised by deed<sup>3</sup>. Where the transfer is not necessarily by deed, a blank transfer operates as an authority to the transferee to fill up all necessary blanks, and, when so filled up, operates as an effective transfer without redelivery<sup>4</sup>. However, to preclude the rights of third parties, the transfer must in its then condition purport to carry to any person taking it in good faith for value a full immediate and absolute title to the subject matter<sup>5</sup>.

1 As to the transfer of the stock or shares of a company see COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 389. A company's articles may or may not provide that the transfer is to be by deed: see Re Tahiti Cotton Co, ex p Sargent (1873) LR 17 Eq 273. BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xii) Lending and Security/981. Power of sale or return of stock and shares.

981. Power of sale or return of stock and shares.

Where stock or shares have been effectually transferred to a banker as security, even though not by deed, he has an implied power of sale on default. If no time is fixed for repayment, he must give the borrower reasonable notice of his intention to sell unless repaid. A month's notice would be sufficient<sup>1</sup>.

The bank must return to the customer the identical shares deposited<sup>2</sup>, except, of course, so far as they have been sold under the power of sale.

1 Deverges v Sandeman, Clarke & Co [1902] 1 Ch 579, CA. The memorandum of deposit usually gives the banker authority to sell upon the borrower's default.

2 Crerar v Bank of Scotland 1921 SC 736; affd 1922 SC (HL) 137 (but judgment was given for the bank on the ground of acquiescence by the customer in the course pursued by the bank). The liability to return the identical shares is right in principle, but it is difficult to see what damage the customer would sustain by the bank's failure to return the identical shares. As to damages see Rosenthal v Alderton & Sons Ltd [1946] KB 374, [1946] 1 All ER 583, CA; Sachs v Miklos [1948] 2 KB 23, [1948] 1 All ER 67, CA; Munro v Willmott [1949] 1 KB 295, [1948] 2 All ER 983.

982. Deposit of certificates.

The mere deposit of stock certificates or share certificates constitutes only an equitable mortgage of the stock or shares which the court will enforce by order for transfer and foreclosure<sup>1</sup>. The mortgagee is not deprived of his remedy for foreclosure merely because the personal remedy to recover the debt is barred by lapse of time<sup>2</sup>, though the right to foreclosure may itself become barred, normally 12 years after the right accrued<sup>3</sup>.

1 Harrold v Plenty [1901] 2 Ch 314. Such certificates are not negotiable. The equitable mortgagee may obtain an injunction against transfer in fraud of his rights: Société Générale de Paris v Tramway Union Co Ltd (1884) 14 QBD 424 at 453 per Lindley LJ. ## 983. Forged transfers.

If a transfer to a banker proves to have been forged, the banker has no title to the stock or shares, his name will be removed from the register and that of the original holder restored, and he will be liable to refund to the company all dividends received<sup>1</sup>.

If the banker has parted with the stock or shares, and his transferee has been registered and had certificates issued to him, the banker is liable to indemnify the company<sup>2</sup>, which is estopped from disputing the title of such transferee. The company would be obliged to restore the original holders to the register and their rights, possibly having to buy in the stock or shares in order to do so; the price of the stock purchased, together with back dividends since that date, would be the measure of the banker's liability<sup>3</sup>.

The liability being based on indemnity, though the sending in of the transfer for registration by the company may also import warranty<sup>4</sup>, the cause of action against the banker does not arise until the company is compelled to reinstate the original holder; and the banker may accordingly be sued any time within six years of that date<sup>5</sup>. It is immaterial that he may have retransferred the shares. Nor is it any defence that the company on registration of the transfer issued certificates to him<sup>6</sup>.

A policy on his own life effected by the debtor may be assigned as security for advances. Notice of the assignment should be given to the insurance company; and, if no notice is given, payment by the company before notice is good as against the assignee<sup>1</sup>.

The mere deposit of a policy as cover gives the banker the rights of an equitable mortgagee<sup>2</sup>.

Where a policy has been so deposited, even without a memorandum, and the depositor becomes bankrupt, his trustee cannot claim it without satisfying the debt to the banker<sup>3</sup>.

986. Goods as security.

A banker may advance money on the security of goods or of documents of title to goods otherwise than by the acceptance of documentary bills or payment pursuant to an irrevocable credit<sup>1</sup>.

If his customer is the real owner of the goods and entitled to the documents, the transaction amounts to a pledge of the goods, with the resulting rights of a pledgee<sup>2</sup>, or it may give rise to an equitable charge<sup>3</sup>. Since neither goods nor documents of title to goods<sup>4</sup> are negotiable, the banker's title as pledgee at common law must depend on that of the pledgor.

A banker paying or accepting pursuant to an irrevocable credit becomes pledgee of the documents of title accompanying the draft<sup>5</sup>.

- 1 As to letters of credit see PARA 923 et seq.

- 2 See PLEDGES AND PAWNS vol 36(1) (2007 Reissue) PARA 122 et seq. The ordinary letter of trust on the terms of which the banker redelivers the documents of title to the pledgor, and by which the pledgor undertakes to hold the goods when received and the proceeds when sold as the banker's trustee and to remit the entire proceeds when realised, does not amount to a bill of sale and, if it did, would be a document used in the ordinary course of business: see Re David Allester Ltd [1922] 2 Ch 211. Where a bank (pledgee) surrendered the documents to the pledgors as trustees for sale, the latter became mercantile agents under the Factors Act 1889, and their subsequent unauthorised pledge was valid as against the bank: see Lloyds Bank Ltd v Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association [1938] 2 KB 147, [1938] 2 All ER 63, CA. As to the position of a banker pledgee giving a delivery order for goods see Alicia Hosiery Ltd v Brown Shipley & Co Ltd [1970] 1 QB 195, [1969] 2 All ER 504; and BAILMENT vol 3(1) (2005 Reissue) PARA 39.

Cf Re Kent and Sussex Sawmills Ltd [1947] Ch 177, [1946] 2 All ER 638 (where a letter instructing the debtor to remit money to the creditor's bank, and expressed to be irrevocable, was held to constitute a charge on the book debt). See also PARA 1674 et seq.

- 4 There is a possible exception at common law for bills of lading: see Lickbarrow v Mason (1794) 5 Term Rep 683. 'The words of the special verdict in Lickbarrow v Mason admittedly overstate the law': see Burdick v Sewell (1884) 13 QBD 159 at 173, CA, per Bowen LJ; and see Sewell v Burdick (1884) 10 App Cas 74 at 98, HL, per Lord Blackburn. If fully negotiable there would have been no reason for including bills of lading with other documents of title in the Factors Act 1889 s 1(4) (see AGENCY vol 1 (2008) PARA 148) and the Sale of Goods Act 1979 s 61(1) (see SALE OF GOODS AND SUPPLY OF SERVICES vol 41 (2005 Reissue) PARA 157), whereas they are so included. ### 987. Protection to banker.

In some cases, where the title of the borrower to goods pledged is defective, the banker may, under certain conditions, have statutory protection. The goods or documents of title to goods must be in the possession either of an unpaid vendor, a purchaser who has not paid for them, or a 'mercantile agent' within the broad definition given to that term by the legislation<sup>1</sup>. Moreover, the goods or the documents of title must have originally remained in or come into the possession of the person with whom the banker is dealing with the consent of the real owner<sup>2</sup>. In the case of a mercantile agent, a pledge of the documents for an antecedent debt would entitle the pledgee to acquire such rights only as the pledgor could have enforced at the time of the pledge<sup>3</sup>, and the same rule probably applies to purchasers or persons who have agreed to purchase<sup>4</sup>; in such a case the security would not be effective.

988. Discounting of bills.

When a banker discounts a bill, he buys it for its face value less a sum representing interest for the period which the bill has to run. The banker takes the bill as transferee for value, and has the holder's normal right to sue on the bill if it is dishonoured. In the case of a customer, the amount of the bill, less discount, is normally carried to current account, and, if the bill is unpaid, the current account is normally debited and the bill is returned to the customer. If the banker wishes to retain his right of recourse to other parties because his customer's account cannot meet the debit, the banker retains the bill and debits a suspense account. Whether the bill is taken from a customer for collection or as security, or is discounted for him, is a question of fact<sup>1</sup>.

The presumption in favour of a bill being taken by way of absolute transfer rather than of pledge or security is not so appropriate in the case of banker and customer as in other cases. Indorsement of a specially indorsed bill is as necessary for collection as for transfer. Even indorsement by the customer of a bill indorsed generally is consistent with his merely putting his name on it as extra security<sup>2</sup>.

There is some doubt<sup>3</sup> whether the entry of the amount of such bills, less discount, as cash in the banker's books would be evidence of the banker having taken them as transferee. Possibly inferences might be drawn from whether the bank held itself out as a discounting bank or not<sup>4</sup>. Where the transaction is really one of discounting, the banker is, of course, at liberty to deal with the bill as he pleases, rediscounting or transferring it.

1 See PARAS 862, 890. As to the meaning of the word 'discount' where the discount is not paid to the discountee see Hamilton Finance Co Ltd v Coverley Westray Walbaum and Tosetti Ltd, and Portland Finance Co Ltd [1969] 1 Lloyd's Rep 53 at 60-62.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xii) Lending and Security/989. Remedies of banker against customer.

989. Remedies of banker against customer.

Where the banker has the customer's indorsement on the bill, he has the remedies of an indorsee against him; otherwise, he has only the remedies of a transferee by delivery<sup>1</sup>. Whether mere dishonour of a bill not indorsed by the customer gives the banker a right to debit the customer's account or to proceed against him on the bill must depend upon the terms on which the bill was delivered to him, that is to say, for collection, discount or otherwise. As a collecting agent the bank would have an agent's right to indemnity<sup>2</sup>.

Instead of indorsing each bill for discount separately, the customer may give to the banker a general guarantee of all bills discounted for him, which has, in relation to the banker, the same operation as specific indorsement in each case<sup>3</sup>.

1 As to the transferee's remedies see PARA 1490. Save in the event of the customer's insolvency, the banker has no right to set off a credit balance on current account against the customer's future or contingent liability as acceptor or indorser of a bill of exchange: see PARA 835.

2 As to an agent's right to indemnity see AGENCY vol 1 (2008) PARA 111 et seq. The dicta as to debiting a dishonoured cheque, though credited as cash, in Capital and Counties Bank Ltd v Gordon [1903] AC 240 at 248, HL, could not be applied to a discounted bill.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xii) Lending and Security/990. Banker's remedies on bills or promissory notes.

990. Banker's remedies on bills or promissory notes.

Where bills or promissory notes are deposited as security, and not absolutely transferred in consideration of the advance, the banker's position is that of pledgee, analogous to that which he holds by virtue of his lien<sup>1</sup>. If he took the bill or note without notice of any defect in the customer's title, he may in any event sue all parties to it to the extent of his advance<sup>2</sup>. If the customer had a good title, the banker may sue all parties for the full amount, holding the balance, if any, over and above the amount advanced as trustee for the customer<sup>3</sup>.

Although there are dicta that, in certain states of the account, a banker may negotiate bills or notes of a customer in his hands<sup>4</sup>, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the banker is probably not entitled to adopt this course where the instruments are security for an advance repayable at a definite date which has not arrived, or where the security is for existing or future overdrafts, without having made a prior request for payment. The usual and proper course is to keep the documents and present them for payment at maturity, and set off the proceeds against the advance. If instruments payable at a fixed date are not duly presented, the banker will have to bear any loss incurred by the omission<sup>5</sup>.

Where a bill or note is given strictly as collateral security, it does not, even while current, suspend the remedy on the debt; and, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the banker is entitled to sue for the advance pending the currency of the bill or note<sup>6</sup>. Where a bill or note is strictly collateral security, satisfaction of the debt does not necessarily discharge the bill or note<sup>7</sup>.

1 A banker's lien is an implied pledge: see PARA 863. As to a banker's lien see PARA 860 et seq; and see LIEN. As to pledge see PLEDGES AND PAWNS.

3 Barclay's Bank Ltd v Aschaffenburg Zellstoffwerke AG [1967] 1 Lloyd's Rep 387, CA. 7 Jenkins v Tongue (1860) 29 LJ Ex 147; Glasscock v Balls (1889) 24 QBD 13, CA. In both cases, discharge of the debt was obtained by the holder of the security; there was no direct payment by the borrower, but this does not seem to affect the principle that payment of a debt does not discharge a note given as security for the debt if the note is in the hands of a holder for value in good faith. In Jenkins v Tongue above the note was being enforced by the payee, but the principle ought arguably to be confined to a holder from the payee in good faith: see Glasscock v Balls above. It would be inequitable that the payee, having satisfied himself, should still be able to sue on the security.

(xiii) Guarantees

991. Guarantees and consideration.

A pre-existing debt is not a good consideration for a guarantee<sup>1</sup>. Where no stipulation for future advances is made in a guarantee, the consideration must be supplied by forbearance to sue for the existing debt at the guarantor's request. This may be implied from the nature of the transaction and from the fact of forbearance<sup>2</sup>. Forbearance for a definite period is not essential<sup>3</sup>. If one only of several accounts is to be covered by a particular guarantee, this must be clearly expressed. The term 'ultimate balance' by itself signifies the ultimate balance owing, combining all accounts<sup>4</sup>.

Where the document is not a formal guarantee, but a letter of comfort, it is a matter of construction whether the document is intended to be legally binding, or whether it gives rise to a moral responsibility only<sup>5</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xiii) Guarantees/992. Disclosure by banker to intending guarantor.

992. Disclosure by banker to intending guarantor.

Subject to the requirement of disclosure where the guarantor is in a non-commercial relationship with the debtor<sup>1</sup>, a banker is not bound to volunteer to an intending guarantor information as to the state of the account or whether the customer was or was not in the habit of overdrawing<sup>2</sup>. If asked by the intending guarantor, however, he must give the information, this being sufficient reason for disclosing the customer's account<sup>3</sup>. During the continuance of a guarantee for an overdraft the banker is bound, on request, to acquaint the guarantor with the amount of his then liability, but not to give further information as to the account or to allow inspection of it<sup>4</sup>.

A guarantor whose signature to a guarantee has been obtained by the fraud of the borrowing customer is not estopped from denying that he had contracted to guarantee the account, if he can show both that there was a fundamental difference between the document he signed and that he thought he was signing, and that in signing he acted with reasonable care<sup>5</sup>.

993. Guarantee limited in amount.

When the guarantor's liability is limited to a specified sum, it depends on the wording of the guarantee whether the surety is surety for the whole debt with the specified limitation to his total liability, or whether he is surety for only part of the debt<sup>1</sup>. In the case of the bankruptcy of the principal debtor, the difference becomes material in determining whether the bank may prove for the whole indebtedness, even though the surety has paid the sum for which he is liable, or whether the surety may prove for that sum<sup>2</sup>. However, the question is usually decided in favour of the bank by special terms in the document.

The Banking Code<sup>3</sup> states that banks will not take unlimited or open-ended guarantees from private individuals: thus such guarantees should always stipulate a recovery limit.

994. Determination of guarantee.

A guarantor is, in general, entitled to determine the guarantee as to future advances by giving notice and paying what is then due<sup>1</sup>. Where the guarantee was under seal, this right appeared to exist in equity<sup>2</sup>, and was possibly recognised even though the guarantee was expressed to be for a definite period, if the banker was not under contract with the principal debtor to make further advances to him<sup>3</sup>.

It appears that a continuing guarantee cannot be revoked so as to exclude outstanding liabilities properly undertaken by the banker on the faith of it, such as bills accepted by him current at the time of notice of revocation<sup>4</sup>. Whether a guarantee covers liabilities which at its expiry are future or contingent is a matter of construction of the particular guarantee, there being no rule of law requiring a guarantee to contain specific wording to do so<sup>5</sup>.

Whether a continuing guarantee is determined as to subsequent advances by the mere fact of death of the guarantor has never been finally decided<sup>6</sup>. It seems probable that it is not. Where there is no provision for giving notice of termination by representatives in the event of death, it may be taken that actual notice of the death given by a responsible person, such as an executor or administrator, terminates the guarantee so far as subsequent advances are concerned<sup>7</sup>. Where, however, the document provides for determination by the surety at the end of a period of notice to the bank, the bank has the right to continue advances up to that time<sup>8</sup>. Whether constructive notice of death is equivalent to actual notice is doubtful<sup>9</sup>.

Where there is specific provision for notice of revocation by the guarantor or his representatives, notice of his death by executors or administrators will not terminate the guarantee. The notice must be one of revocation<sup>10</sup>.

Whether the death of one joint surety terminates the liability of the other for subsequent advances is also doubtful<sup>11</sup>; but, where the guarantee is joint and several, the death of one guarantor does not affect the liability of the survivor for subsequent advances<sup>12</sup>.

A guarantee ceases to be a continuing guarantee upon notice of the guarantor's mental incapacity<sup>13</sup>.

Even where a guarantee is joint only, judgment against one guarantor does not operate as a bar to any claim against the other or others<sup>14</sup>.

2 Re Crace, Balfour v Crace [1902] 1 Ch 733 at 738; and see Lloyd's v Harper (1880) 16 ChD 290, CA. A guarantee, if it is to take effect as a deed rather than as a simple contract, must now comply with the requirements for the execution of deeds contained in the Law of Property (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1989, which abolished the requirement of a seal: see DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS vol 13 (2007 Reissue) PARA 7.

3 There is no direct authority for this proposition; but see Lloyd's v Harper (1880) 16 ChD 290 at 314, CA, per James LJ. It would not be equitable to determine the guarantee if the banker was bound to make further advances to the principal debtor; he is not released from such obligation by the withdrawal of the guarantee by the third party. In Westminster Bank Ltd v Sassoon (1926) 5 Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers 19, in which a guarantee finished 'This guarantee will expire on 30 June 1925', and the guarantor was called upon to pay in October 1925, it was held that the guarantee was a continuing one.

4 See Hollond v Teed (1848) 7 Hare 50 (where a guarantee given to a bank for advances and bills honoured, though terminated by the death of a partner in the bank, was held to apply to bills accepted by the bank, and current at his death).

I am of opinion that this guarantee was not determined by the death. ### 995. Change of company or firm guaranteed.

Where either the bank or the guaranteed party is a body corporate, joint stock or otherwise, internal change by transfer of shares, issue of new capital, change of directors or the like has no effect on a guarantee as regards future advances<sup>1</sup>.

In the absence of any agreement to the contrary, any change in the constitution of a firm for which a guarantee is given will, however, revoke the guarantee as to future transactions<sup>2</sup>; and in the case of a bank which is a partnership, a change of partners would similarly nullify the guarantee as to future advances<sup>3</sup>.

Where guarantees are given to a corporate bank, its absorption of another bank does not affect the guarantees<sup>4</sup>, and guarantees given to the absorbed bank, so far as a definite amount is due at the date of absorption, inure for the benefit of the absorbing one<sup>5</sup>. Subject to contrary agreement<sup>6</sup>, in the case of amalgamation as distinguished from absorption, guarantees given to either bank would probably be determined<sup>7</sup>, except for ascertained and existing debts due at the time of the amalgamation and assigned by either to the joint body<sup>8</sup>.

996. Interest on bankruptcy.

Where a guarantee provides for payment of interest on 'money remaining due' from the principal debtor, no claim may be maintained against the principal debtor for interest accruing after the making of a bankruptcy order<sup>1</sup> unless and until the bankrupt's estate pays 100 pence in the pound. However, a claim may be maintained where the words are 'until repayment of the principal sum'<sup>2</sup>.

1 Re Moss, ex p Hallet [1905] 2 KB 307. The reasoning is not that a creditor's rights to submit a proof in respect of interest are limited, but that bankruptcy prevents the debt being recoverable against the bankrupt, so that it is not due and owing.

As to guarantees more generally (ie other than in a banking context) see PARA 1013 et seq.

997. Remedies of banker.

The banker is not obliged to resort to securities in his hands before proceeding against the surety<sup>1</sup>.

Where a continuing guarantee under hand is given for a running account, it is doubtful at what time a cause of action accrues. In one case it was held that a cause of action arises as soon as any advance has been made, and that each item would be barred when six years had elapsed<sup>2</sup>; but in another the mere existence of a debt, without balance struck or demand made on the guarantor, was held not to make time run from that date<sup>3</sup>. Normally guarantees to banks provide for determination on demand by the bank or at the end of a stated period of notice by the surety or his personal representatives. Payment by the debtor of interest on account of principal before the expiration of the limitation period binds all persons liable for the debt<sup>4</sup>.

1 Re Howe, ex p Brett (1871) 6 Ch App 838 at 841 (laying down the rule that the surety has no right or interest in the securities until he has paid the debt); Ewart v Latta (1865) 4 Macq 983 at 987, 989, HL, per Lord

Westbury. See also Duncan Fox & Co v North and South Wales Bank (1880) 6 App Cas 1 at 10, 14, HL, per Lord Selborne, and at 18, 20 per Lord Blackburn; the remarks of Lord Watson at 22, as to the creditor's duty to take payment from the person primarily liable, are explainable, inasmuch as the contest was not between the holder of the securities and the surety. As to the discharge of the surety by dealings with the principal, and as to the right of the surety to securities on payment of the debt, see PARA 1138 et seq. The discussion as to guarantees here (ie in this paragraph and in PARAS 991-996) is in a banking context: as to guarantee and indemnity generally see PARA 1013 et seq.

The difficulty may be avoided by taking a new guarantee before the end of the six years, or by specifying in the guarantee the liability of the surety to be to pay a certain time after demand. In Bradford Old Bank Ltd v Sutcliffe [1918] 2 KB 833, CA, it was held that no cause of action arose against the surety until demand had been made. The principle is recognised in Joachimson v Swiss Bank Corp [1921] 3 KB 110, CA. This view is probably the correct one. In Lloyds Bank Ltd v Margolis [1954] 1 All ER 734, [1954] 1 WLR 644, Upjohn J held that, where there was the relationship of banker and customer and the customer was allowed to overdraw against a legal charge providing for repayment on demand, that meant what it said (applying observations of Denning LJ in Barclays Bank Ltd v Beck [1952] 2 QB 47 at 54, [1952] 1 All ER 549 at 553, CA). ## (xiv) Freezing Injunctions

998. Nature of a freezing injunction.

A freezing injunction<sup>1</sup> is an interim order of the court restraining a party from removing from the jurisdiction assets<sup>2</sup> located there, or restraining a party from dealing with<sup>3</sup> any assets whether located within the jurisdiction or not<sup>4</sup>. The foundation of the court's jurisdiction is the need to prevent judgments of the court from being rendered ineffective, whether by the removal of the defendant's assets from the jurisdiction, or by dissipation<sup>5</sup>.

The purpose of a freezing injunction is not to improve the position of the claimant in an insolvency; a freezing injunction is not a form of pre-trial attachment, but a relief in personam which prohibits certain acts in relation to the assets in question; and it is not the purpose of the freezing jurisdiction to freeze a defendant's assets to ensure that there are funds from which the claimant will be able to satisfy a judgment, regardless of the defendant's need to draw on the funds to meet his debts as they fall due<sup>6</sup>.

A freezing injunction may be made without notice if it appears to the court that there are good reasons for not giving notice<sup>7</sup>. It is not uncommon for a claimant to apply at the same time for other interim remedies<sup>8</sup>.

1 Freezing injunctions were formerly called Mareva injunctions, the term 'Mareva injunction' deriving from Mareva Compania Naviera SA v International Bulkcarriers SA, The Mareva [1980] 1 All ER 213n, CA. Such an injunction was first granted in Nippon Yusen Kaisha v Karageorgis [1975] 3 All ER 282, [1975] 1 WLR 1093, CA. See further CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 396 et seq.

2 If there are no limitations put upon the word 'assets', it includes chattels such as motor vehicles, jewellery, objets d'art and other valuables as well as choses in action: CBS United Kingdom Ltd v Lambert [1983] Ch 37 at 42, [1982] 3 All ER 237 at 241, CA. A freezing injunction ordinarily covers any assets which are acquired between the granting of the order and the eventual execution of any judgment obtained in the proceedings or earlier discharge of the order: see TDK Tape Distributor (UK) Ltd v Videochoice Ltd [1985] 3 All ER 345 at 349, [1986] 1 WLR 141 at 145. As to choses or things in action see CHOSSES IN ACTION vol 13 (2009) PARA 1 et seq.

3 The words 'dealing with' are to be given a wide meaning and are not to be construed as ejusdem generis with 'removing from the jurisdiction'; and the freezing injunction extends to cases where there is a danger that the assets will be dissipated in this country as well as by removal out of the jurisdiction: Z Ltd v A-Z and AA-LL [1982] QB 558 at 571, [1982] 1 All ER 556 at 561, CA, per Lord Denning MR.

For an example of a freezing injunction see Practice Direction--Interim Injunctions PD 25 PARA 6, Annex. As to the CPR generally see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 24 et seq.

Banks owe no duty of care to ensure that funds held in accounts which are the subject of a freezing order are not dissipated, although they may be guilty of a contempt of court if the circumstances justify it: Customs and Excise Comrs v Barclays Bank plc [2006] UKHL 28, [2007] 1 AC 181, [2006] 4 All ER 256, [2006] 2 All ER (Comm) 831.

Cf Z Ltd v A-Z and AA-LL [1982] QB 558 at 573, [1982] 1 All ER 556 at 562, CA, where Lord Denning MR described the injunction as a method of attaching the asset itself; the injunction operates in rem, but not so as to give a charge in favour of any particular creditor. This view can no longer be sustained in the light of later decisions: see Babanaft International Co SA v Bassatne [1990] Ch 13 at 25, [1989] 1 All ER 433 at 438, CA; Derby & Co Ltd v Weldon (Nos 3 and 4) [1990] Ch 65 at 82, [1989] 1 All ER 1002 at 1011; Mercedes-Benz AG v Leiduck [1996] AC 284 at 300, [1995] 3 All ER 929 at 939, PC.

7 See CPR 25.3; and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 321.

8 Such interim remedies include, for example: permission to issue and serve a claim form out of the jurisdiction (see eg Third Chandris Shipping Corp v Unimarine SA, The Pythia, The Angelic Wings, The Genie [1979] QB 645, [1979] 2 All ER 972, CA); a search order (see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 319); permission to issue a writ ne exeat regno (see eg Al Nahkel for Contracting and Trading Ltd v Lowe [1986] QB 235, [1986] 1 All ER 729; Allied Arab Bank Ltd v Hajjar [1988] QB 787, [1987] 3 All ER 739; and see EQUITY vol 16(2) (Reissue) PARA 495); or an injunction to restrain the defendant from leaving the jurisdiction (see eg Bayer AG v Winter [1986] 1 All ER 733, [1986] 1 WLR 497, CA; Re Oriental Credit Ltd [1988] Ch 204, [1988] 1 All ER 892).

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xiv) Freezing Injunctions/999. Jurisdiction to grant freezing injunctions.

999. Jurisdiction to grant freezing injunctions.

The power to grant freezing injunctions is statutory<sup>1</sup> and is exercisable in cases where a party to proceedings is, as well as in cases where he is not, domiciled, resident or present within the jurisdiction of the High Court<sup>2</sup>.

A freezing injunction is an interim remedy and not a final order<sup>3</sup>. Subject to provisions of the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982<sup>4</sup>, a right to obtain an interim remedy is not a cause of action, and it cannot stand on its own; it is dependent upon there being a pre-existing cause of action against the defendant arising out of an invasion, actual or threatened by him, of a legal or equitable right of the claimant for the enforcement of which the defendant is amenable to the jurisdiction of the court<sup>5</sup>.

A freezing injunction is ancillary to a substantive pecuniary claim for debt or damages<sup>6</sup>; and the court will not ordinarily grant a freezing injunction in support of a claim for purely declaratory relief<sup>7</sup>.

However, the High Court in England and Wales or Northern Ireland has power to grant interim relief<sup>8</sup> where: (1) proceedings have been or are to be commenced in a Brussels or Lugano Contracting State or a Regulation State<sup>9</sup> other than the United Kingdom or in a part of the United Kingdom<sup>10</sup> other than that in which the High Court in question exercises jurisdiction; and (2) the proceedings are or will be proceedings within the scope of the 1968 Convention<sup>11</sup>, whether or not that Convention has effect in relation to the proceedings<sup>12</sup>.

A freezing injunction granted before enforcement may be continued in force in aid of enforcement<sup>13</sup>; and the court has power to grant a freezing injunction after judgment in aid of enforcement<sup>14</sup>. A freezing injunction is not, however, 'made for the purpose of enforcing a judgment' and therefore cannot be registered<sup>15</sup> as a land charge under the Land Charges Act 1972<sup>16</sup>.

1 The power of the High Court is conferred by the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 37(1) (re-enacting with modifications the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act 1925 s 45); and the power of the county court is conferred by the County Courts Act 1984 s 38 (as substituted and amended): see COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARA 711. As from a day to be appointed, the Supreme Court Act 1981 is to be renamed as the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 Pt 1 para 1. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. A freezing injunction may be granted in aid of arbitration proceedings: see the Arbitration Act 1996 s 44(2)(e); and ARBITRATION vol 2 (2008) PARA 1254. See also The Rena K [1979] QB 377 at 406-411, [1979] 1 All ER 397 at 417-420; Third Chandris Shipping Corp v Unimarine SA, The Pythia, The Angelic Wings, The Genie [1979] QB 645 at 663, [1979] 2 All ER 972 at 981, CA.

In exceptional cases the courts may grant a freezing injunction against a co-defendant against whom there is no claim, so long as it is ancillary and incidental to the claim against the other co-defendant: TSB Private Bank International SA v Chabra [1992] 2 All ER 245, [1992] 1 WLR 231; Aiglon Ltd v Gau Shan Co Ltd [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep 164; Mercantile Group (Europe) AG v Aiyela [1994] QB 366, [1994] 1 All ER 110, CA.

8 For the purposes of the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25, 'interim relief', in relation to the High Court in England and Wales or Northern Ireland, means interim relief of any kind which that court has power to grant in proceedings relating to matters within its jurisdiction, other than a warrant for the arrest of property, or provision for obtaining evidence: s 25(7). It includes the grant of a freezing injunction: see eg Babanaft International Co SA v Bassatne [1990] Ch 13, [1989] 1 All ER 433, CA; Republic of Haiti v Duvalier [1990] 1 QB 202, [1989] 1 All ER 456, CA.

9 As to the meanings of 'Brussels Contracting State', 'Lugano Contracting State' and 'Regulation State' see the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 ss 1, 50; and CONFLICT OF LAWS vol 8(3) (Reissue) PARA 65.

10 'Part of the United Kingdom' means England and Wales, Scotland or Northern Ireland: Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 50. As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 2 note 3.

11 '1968 Convention' means the Convention on jurisdiction and the enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters (Cmd 7395), including the Protocol annexed to that Convention, signed at Brussels on 27 September 1968; and, unless the context otherwise requires, references to, or to any provision of, the 1968 Convention are references to that Convention as amended: see the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 ss 1(1), (2)(a), 50; and CONFLICT OF LAWS vol 8(3) (Reissue) PARA 65.

The proceedings must be within the scope of the 1968 Convention as determined by art 1: see the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25(1)(b); and CONFLICT OF LAWS vol 8(3) (Reissue) PARA 138. The 1968 Convention art 1 applies in civil and commercial matters whatever the nature of the court or tribunal; and it does not extend, in particular, to revenue, customs or administrative matters: art 1. The 1968 Convention does not apply to: (1) the status or legal capacity of natural persons, rights in property arising out of a matrimonial relationship, wills and succession; (2) bankruptcy, proceedings relating to the winding up of insolvent companies or other legal persons, judicial arrangements, compositions and analogous proceedings; (3) social security; (4) arbitration: art 1.

12 Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25(1) (amended by the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1991 Sch 2 para 12; and SI 2001/3929). On an application for any interim relief under the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s 25(1), the court may refuse to grant that relief if, in the opinion of the court, the fact that the court has no jurisdiction apart from s 25 in relation to the subject matter of the proceedings in question makes it inexpedient for the court to grant it: s 25(2). BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xiv) Freezing Injunctions/1000. Freezing injunctions over assets outside the jurisdiction.

1000. Freezing injunctions over assets outside the jurisdiction.

The court has jurisdiction before or after judgment to grant a freezing injunction in respect of foreign assets<sup>1</sup>.

The cases in which it will be appropriate to grant a freezing injunction, pending trial, over assets worldwide will be rare<sup>2</sup>. Factors which, in combination, have been held sufficient to justify such an injunction are: (1) the plain and admitted intention of defendants to move their assets out of the reach of courts of law; (2) the resources they have obtained and the skill they have shown in doing so; and (3) the magnitude of the sums involved<sup>3</sup>. There are conflicting statements as to the relevance of evidence that a foreign court would be willing to make orders similar in effect to a freezing injunction<sup>4</sup>.

It may be made a requirement of a pre-judgment worldwide freezing injunction that, by undertaking or proviso or a combination of both: (a) oppression of the defendant by way of exposure to a multiplicity of proceedings is avoided; (b) the defendant is protected against misuse of information gained from the ordinary order for disclosure in aid of a freezing injunction<sup>5</sup>; and (c) the position of third parties is protected<sup>6</sup>.

A pre-judgment freezing injunction will more readily be granted in respect of assets outside the jurisdiction where the claimant asserts a proprietary or tracing claim<sup>7</sup>.

The arguments against granting a freezing injunction extending to assets outside the jurisdiction are much weaker in a case where judgment has been obtained than in a case where an interim order is sought before trial, and there will be many cases where justice requires that, once judgment has been obtained, a successful claimant should be able to obtain the protection of a freezing injunction extending to all the assets of the defendant whether within or outside the jurisdiction<sup>8</sup>. After judgment the parties' positions are different in the important respect that the claimant may attach assets of the defendant against whom he has obtained judgment<sup>9</sup>. It may be appropriate for the court to exercise its ample jurisdiction by making a temporary 'holding' injunction against the judgment debtor, requiring him not to move or deal with his assets without giving to the judgment creditor the few days' notice which is the minimum reasonably required to enable the judgment creditor to invoke any assistance which the local court may afford to him in respect of his judgment debt<sup>10</sup>. A post-judgment freezing injunction should normally be of limited duration: the claimant should be encouraged to proceed with proper methods of execution<sup>11</sup>.

The grant of worldwide freezing injunctions has given rise to the question as to how banks can be protected from committing an unintended contempt of court when they have branches abroad<sup>12</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xiv) Freezing Injunctions/1001. Guidelines for the grant of a freezing injunction.

1001. Guidelines for the grant of a freezing injunction.

The guidelines<sup>1</sup> to be observed on an application for a freezing injunction are:

- 41 (1) the claimant should make full and frank disclosure of all matters in his knowledge which are material for the judge to know<sup>2</sup>;
- 42 (2) the claimant should give particulars of his claim against the defendant, stating the ground of his claim and its amount, and fairly stating the points made against it by the defendant;
- 43 (3) the claimant should give some grounds for believing that the defendant has assets in the relevant place<sup>3</sup>; the existence of a bank account is enough, whether it is in overdraft or not;
- 44 (4) the claimant should give some grounds for believing that there is a risk of the defendant's assets being removed or dissipated<sup>4</sup> before the judgment or award is satisfied;
- 45 (5) the claimant will usually be required to give an undertaking in damages in case he fails in his claim or the injunction turns out to be unjustified; and in a suitable case this should be supported by a bond or security<sup>5</sup>;
- 46 (6) the claimant must establish a good arguable case<sup>6</sup>;
- 47 (7) the difference between a good arguable case and a serious question to be tried, which is incapable of definition, does not affect the applicability of the general principle that it is no part of the court's function at the interim stage to try to resolve factual disputes on which the claims of either party may ultimately depend, nor to decide difficult questions of law which call for detailed argument and mature consideration<sup>7</sup>;
- 48 (8) the defendant should not be prevented from using his assets for a purpose which does not conflict with the purpose of a freezing injunction, for example the making of payments which the defendant in good faith considers he should make in the ordinary course of business<sup>8</sup>;
- 49 (9) the order should normally specify a maximum sum, that is to say it should restrain removal or dissipation of assets save in so far as such assets exceed a specified sum<sup>9</sup>;
- 50 (10) the order should not be used to prevent a defendant from living as he has always lived, or from paying legal costs to defend the proceedings<sup>10</sup>;
- 51 (11) the order should make reasonable provision for the protection of third parties<sup>11</sup> and should include notice of their right to seek variation of the order<sup>12</sup>.

modified by later case law and with the modifications consequent on the replacement of the Mareva injunction with the freezing injunction (see PARA 998).

3 The words 'in the relevant place' have been substituted for 'here' to take account of the subsequent recognition of the court's jurisdiction to grant a freezing injunction over foreign assets: see PARA 1000.

4 The words 'or dissipated' have been added to take account of the now well-established principle that a freezing injunction may restrain not only the removal of assets from the jurisdiction but also dissipation of assets: see PARA 998.

1002. Disclosure in aid of a freezing injunction.

There is inherent in the statutory power to grant a freezing injunction the power to make all such ancillary orders as appear to the court to be just and convenient to ensure that the freezing order achieves its purpose<sup>1</sup>. The court has express power to grant an order directing a party to provide information about the location of relevant property or assets or to provide information about relevant property or assets which are or may be the subject of an application for a freezing injunction<sup>2</sup>.

An order for disclosure may, for example, require the defendant to disclose the nature, location and value of all his assets within and, in some cases, outside the jurisdiction, including the identity of any bank accounts whether held by the defendant in his own name or jointly or by nominees or otherwise howsoever, but excluding any asset the value of which is less than a specific sum<sup>3</sup>. The order may require the defendant to give disclosure himself or by a specified agent, such as his solicitor<sup>4</sup>.

1003. Protection of third parties.

The court must bear in mind not only the balance of convenience and justice between claimant and defendant, but above all also as between claimant and third parties. Where assets of a defendant are held by a third party incidentally to the general business of the third party, such as the accounts of the defendant held by a bank, or goods held by a bailee as custodian, for example in a warehouse, an effective indemnity in favour of the third party will adequately hold this balance, because service of the injunction will not lead to any major interference with the third party's business. However, where the effect of service must lead to interference with the performance of a contract between the third party and the defendant which relates specifically to the assets in question, the right of the third party in relation to his contract must clearly prevail over the claimant's desire to secure the defendant's assets for himself against the day of judgment<sup>1</sup>. Where the balance is in favour of the grant of an injunction, the claimant will normally be required to give such undertakings as the court considers reasonably necessary to protect third party interests. The claimant will normally be required to give undertakings: (1) to indemnify any third party affected by the order against all expenses reasonably incurred in complying with the order and all liabilities flowing from such compliance<sup>2</sup>; (2) in the case of a freezing injunction which may affect ships in port, an undertaking to pay the actual income lost to the relevant port authority as a consequence of the granting of the injunction<sup>3</sup>; (3) in the case of a freezing injunction over foreign assets, not to serve notice of the order on third parties outside the jurisdiction and/or not without permission of the court to take any action in any foreign jurisdiction in respect of any of the defendant's assets<sup>4</sup>.

All freezing injunctions which are intended to be served on banks should contain a suitable proviso preserving the bank's rights of set-off<sup>5</sup>.

An innocent third party will normally be permitted to intervene in the claim for the purpose of applying for a variation in a freezing order<sup>6</sup>. In such a case the claimant must expect to pay, and should in justice pay, all reasonable legal costs of a successful applicant<sup>7</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xiv) Freezing Injunctions/1004. General effect of freezing injunctions on third parties.

1004. General effect of freezing injunctions on third parties.

In accordance with general principles, a freezing injunction takes effect at the very moment it is pronounced, even though the order has not then been drawn up and even though it has not then been served on the defendant<sup>1</sup>.

Every person who has knowledge of the order must do what he reasonably can to preserve the assets to which it relates. He must not assist in any way in the disposal of any such assets, for otherwise he is himself in contempt of court by aiding and abetting the contempt of the defendant<sup>2</sup>. This principle is one of the strengths of a freezing injunction, but its application to an injunction in respect of overseas assets causes a difficulty because it would be wrong for an English court, by making an order in respect of overseas assets against a defendant amenable to its jurisdiction, to impose or attempt to impose obligations on persons not before the court in respect of acts to be done by them abroad regarding property outside the jurisdiction<sup>3</sup>.

To meet this difficulty, it is the practice of the court to insert in a freezing injunction over foreign assets a proviso to make it clear that third parties are not affected by the order<sup>4</sup>. On one wording of the proviso, the order does not affect third parties unless and to the extent that the order is enforced by the court of the states in which any of the defendant's assets are located<sup>5</sup>. On another wording, the claimant leaves to the English court any decision whether action should be taken by him in any foreign jurisdiction in respect of any of the defendant's assets<sup>6</sup>. The proviso need apply only to assets outside England and Wales<sup>7</sup>. There are conflicting views as to whether the proviso should or should not apply to individuals, that is to say natural persons, who are resident in England and Wales<sup>8</sup>.

1005. Freezing injunctions against banks.

The circumstances in which an application for a freezing injunction can properly be made against a bank are very rare. Two factors weigh against the grant of such an order: (1) a bank's stock in trade is money borrowed from its depositors and, in so far as the bank is called upon to repay its depositors, any reduction in the bank's assets will be in the ordinary course of its business; and (2) all banking business is dependent on the maintenance of confidence on the part of its customers and any order which could produce a run on the bank would be inimical to the purposes for which the jurisdiction to grant freezing injunctions exists<sup>1</sup>.

A bank, notified by a third party of a freezing injunction granted to the third party against one of the bank's customers affecting an account held by the customer with the bank, owed no duty to the third party to take reasonable care to comply with the terms of the injunction: see Customs and Excise Comrs v Barclays Bank plc [2006] UKHL 28, [2007] 1 AC 181, [2006] 4 All ER 256.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xiv) Freezing Injunctions/1006. Effect on bank of a freezing injunction against a customer.

1006. Effect on bank of a freezing injunction against a customer.

By far the greatest burden of policing freezing injunctions falls on banks<sup>1</sup>. The effect on a bank of a freezing injunction against a customer has been judicially considered in relation to: (1) searching for accounts maintained by the defendant<sup>2</sup>; (2) joint accounts and accounts in the name of third parties<sup>3</sup>; (3) maximum sum orders<sup>4</sup>; (4) honouring of cheques and cheque or credit cards<sup>5</sup>; (5) letters of credit and performance bonds<sup>6</sup>; and (6) the banker's right of set-off<sup>7</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xiv) Freezing Injunctions/1007. Searching for accounts maintained by defendant.

1007. Searching for accounts maintained by defendant.

If the claimant is able to identify bank accounts maintained by the defendant, he should do so with as much precision as is reasonably practicable<sup>1</sup>, and normally any such account will be specified in the order itself.

If the claimant cannot identify a bank account, he may request the bank to conduct a search so as to see whether it holds any assets of the defendant, provided that he undertakes to pay the cost of the search<sup>2</sup>. Service of a freezing injunction on a bank obliges the bank, as a matter of self-defence for the purpose of complying with the order, to carry out a search throughout all its branches in order to see whether it holds any assets of the particular defendant<sup>3</sup>.

Where it is intended to serve a freezing injunction on a bank, it should be made clear that its terms do not apply, save in the case of assets specifically referred to, to shares or title deeds which a bank may hold as security, to articles in a safe deposit which the bank may hold in the name of the defendant, or to assets which come within the control of the bank subsequently to the date on which a copy of the order is served on the bank and after its ascertainment of the assets which it then holds<sup>4</sup>.

BANKING/(3) BUSINESS OF BANKING/(xiv) Freezing Injunctions/1008. Joint accounts and accounts in the name of third parties.

1008. Joint accounts and accounts in the name of third parties.

Any freezing injunction which it is intended to serve on a bank is not applicable to a joint account in the name of the defendant and of some other person or persons unless the order is so drafted as to make it clear that it is intended to apply to it, but this would be justifiable only in rare cases<sup>1</sup>. Where the other holder of a joint account is not a party, the order should include reference to the joint account, and a copy of the order should be served on the other holder<sup>2</sup>.

The position in relation to accounts in the name of a third party is as follows:

- 52 (1) where a claimant invites the court to include within the scope of a freezing injunction assets which appear on their face to belong to a third party, for example a bank account in the name of a third party, the court should not accede to the invitation without good reason for supposing that the assets are in truth the assets of the defendant;
- 53 (2) where the defendant asserts that the assets belong to a third party, the court is not obliged to accept that assertion without inquiry, but may do so depending on the circumstances; and the same applies where it is the third party who makes the assertion, on an application to intervene;
- 54 (3) in deciding whether to accept the assertion of a defendant or a third party without further inquiry, the court will be guided by what is just and convenient, not only as between the claimant and the defendant, but also as between the claimant, the defendant and the third party;
- 55 (4) where the court decides not to accept the assertion without further inquiry, it may order an issue to be tried between the claimant and the third party in advance of the main proceedings, or it may order that the issue await the outcome of the main proceedings, again depending in each case on what is just and convenient<sup>3</sup>.

1009. Maximum sum orders.

It is normal practice for a freezing injunction to restrain removal or disposal of or dealing with the defendant's assets save in so far as they exceed a maximum sum. A maximum sum order is preferable to an order which freezes all assets because: (1) it represents no more than what a claimant may justifiably request from the court; and (2) an order which freezes all assets is, in the ordinary case, bound to lead to an outcry from the defendant and to the need for an amendment, at any rate if he is resident or carries on business within the jurisdiction, and such an order cannot be justified in principle, save in wholly exceptional cases, unless it is clear that the defendant's assets within the jurisdiction are insufficient to meet the claim, and that he is neither resident nor carries on business within the jurisdiction<sup>1</sup>.

A maximum sum order is, however, unworkable so far as any individual bank is concerned because it cannot know what assets the defendant may or may not have elsewhere. To meet this difficulty, the first paragraph of an order which it is intended to serve on a bank should restrain the defendant up to the maximum sum in question, but the second paragraph should then qualify the first by providing that, so far as specified accounts are concerned, the defendant is not to be entitled to draw upon any of them except to the extent that any of them exceeds the maximum sum, or so as to reduce the balance below that sum<sup>2</sup>.

In calculating the amount which is not caught by a freezing injunction, a bank need make no provision in respect of future instalments of interest and repayment of principal due to it from the defendant<sup>3</sup>.

Unless payment can be made out of funds in excess of the sum, if any, specified in the order<sup>1</sup>, a bank is not entitled to honour cheques drawn on the account whether before or after the making of the order<sup>2</sup>.

If, however, the defendant has used a cheque card or credit card<sup>3</sup> so as to give rise to obligations on the part of a bank to third parties, the bank is entitled, and indeed bound, to honour such obligations to the third parties concerned<sup>4</sup>. The order should not preclude the debiting of the defendant's account in respect of any cheque card or credit card transaction effected by the defendant prior to the date when the order is served on the bank<sup>5</sup> but the position in relation to transactions effected after that date may depend on whether the bank has taken reasonable steps to withdraw the card facilities from the defendant<sup>6</sup>.

A freezing injunction will not be granted to restrain payment under a letter of credit or a performance bond, but a freezing injunction may apply to the proceeds as and when received by or for the defendant<sup>1</sup>. This can be achieved by confining the terms of the order, so far as it affects the defendant's bank accounts, to the accounts themselves, without extending it to the defendant's assets generally in so far as these may be under the control of banks on which a copy of the order is served<sup>2</sup>.

There is a doubt whether, in the absence of express provision, a bank is entitled under a freezing injunction to exercise its right of set-off<sup>1</sup> so as to reduce or extinguish a credit balance on an account maintained by the defendant<sup>2</sup>. In order to avoid the necessity of banks going to court for variations to freezing injunctions, and in order to save court time, it is desirable that all freezing injunctions which are intended to be served on banks should contain a suitable proviso<sup>3</sup>.

4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY

(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE

(i) The Nature of a Guarantee

A. DEFINITIONS

1013. Guarantee.

As in the case of any other contract<sup>9</sup>, a valid guarantee requires an agreement<sup>10</sup>, made between parties intending to create legal relations<sup>11</sup> and having the capacity to contract<sup>12</sup>, supported by consideration, actual or implied<sup>13</sup>. An additional statutory requirement is that the contract must either be in writing or be evidenced by a written note or memorandum signed by or on behalf of the party to be charged<sup>14</sup>.

A guarantee is often termed a 'collateral' or 'conditional' contract, in order to distinguish it from one that is 'original' or 'absolute'<sup>15</sup>. However, both of these expressions may be misleading. The word 'collateral' does not occur in the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>16</sup>, and cannot, therefore, safely be accepted as affording a certain criterion whether a promise is or is not within that enactment<sup>17</sup>. Nor is the obligation of a guarantor necessarily, or even usually, conditional, except in the broad sense that he will be discharged if the principal debtor performs the obligation guaranteed<sup>18</sup>.

A continuing guarantee is one which extends to a series of transactions and is not exhausted by nor confined to a single credit or transaction<sup>19</sup>.

Whether any particular contractual promise is to be classified as a guarantee so as to attract all or any of the legal consequences which flow from that classification depends upon the words in which the parties have expressed the promise. The use of the word 'guarantee' is not itself conclusive<sup>20</sup>. In commercial usage, the word 'guarantee' is often applied to obligations that do not fall within the narrow legal definition<sup>21</sup>. With the exception of performance bonds (or performance guarantees), which are discussed below<sup>22</sup>, such usages fall outside the scope of this title. Also outside the scope of this title are cheque guarantee cards<sup>23</sup>, export credit guarantees<sup>24</sup>, protection and indemnity ('P & I') club guarantees<sup>25</sup> and the modern law of bail in which the concept of suretyship is employed<sup>26</sup>.

3 The promisor is usually referred to as the guarantor or surety: see PARA 1017.

4 'Translated into modern legal terminology 'to answer for' is 'to accept liability for': Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] AC 331 at 347, [1972] 2 All ER 393 at 400-401, HL, per Lord Diplock. See further PARA 1052.

5 The promisee is usually referred to as the creditor: see PARA 1016.

6 The words 'debt, default or miscarriage' are taken from the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4; ' . . . 'debt, default or miscarriage' is descriptive of failure to perform legal obligations, existing or future, arising from any source, not only from contractual promises, but in any other factual situations capable of giving rise to legal obligations such as those resulting from bailment, tort or unsatisfied judgments': Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] AC 331 at 347-348, [1972] 2 All ER 393 at 401, HL, per Lord Diplock. See PARA 1052 note 5.

7 This person is usually referred to as the principal debtor: see PARA 1015.

16 Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4: see PARA 1052.

17 See Harris v Huntbach (1757) 1 Burr 373 at 375 per Lord Mansfield CJ, which has often been discussed in cases where the incidence of a mortgage debt was in controversy. According to these cases, the strict literal interpretation of 'collateral' is 'parallel' or 'additional' (Re Athill, Athill v Athill (1880) 16 ChD 211 at 222, CA), and it does not carry the signification 'secondary', unless the circumstances of the case justify such a construction (Re Athill, Athill v Athill at 222, 225). Neither does it necessarily of itself bear the meaning 'auxiliary' (Early v Early, Williams v Early (1878) 16 ChD 214n at 215 per Hall V-C), although 'further security' has been interpreted to do so (see Stringer v Harper (1858) 26 Beav 33). A security described as 'collateral' may, nevertheless, in view of its covenants and other provisions and the surrounding circumstances of the case, be held to be a complete, perfect and independent security (Re Athill, Athill v Athill above), although, where the words used by the parties, together with the facts of the case, indicate an intention to regard a particular security as 'collateral', it will be so construed by the court (see Marquis of Bute v Cunynghame (1826) 2 Russ 275; Lipscomb v Lipscomb (1868) LR 7 Eq 501; De Rochefort v Dawes (1871) LR 12 Eq 540). To describe a guarantee as a 'collateral contract' does not sufficiently emphasise its accessory character, although it would seem that the words 'collateral security' might do so, as the word 'security', even by itself, ordinarily means something auxiliary to an antecedent obligation: National Telephone Co v IRC [1899] 1 QB 250 at 258, CA, per AL Smith LJ; affd [1900] AC 1, HL.

18 In General Produce Co v United Bank Ltd [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep 255 at 258-259, Lloyd J distinguished between two classes of guarantee: a promise which becomes effective if the debtor fails to perform his obligations, and a promise that the debtor will perform his obligations. Guarantees in the latter class are effectively unconditional, for the creditor (unless he has agreed to the contrary) may pursue either the principal debtor or the guarantor, as he chooses: Jackson v Digby (1854) 2 WR 540; Ewart v Latta (1865) 4 Macq 983, HL; Carter v White (1883) 25 ChD 666 at 670, CA, per Cotton LJ; Morrison v Barking Chemicals Co Ltd [1919] 2 Ch 325; Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] AC 331 at 356-357, [1972] 2 All ER 393 at 408-409, HL, per Lord Simon of Glaisdale; NRG Vision Ltd v Churchfield Leasing Ltd [1988] BCLC 624 at 635, 4 BCC 56 at 64-65; and see PARAS 1090 et seq, 1189 et seq. 24 Under the Export and Investment Guarantees Act 1991 s 1, the Secretary of State may make arrangements with a view, inter alia, to facilitating, directly or indirectly, supplies by persons carrying on business in the United Kingdom of goods or services to persons carrying on business outside the United Kingdom (see s 1(1)) and for the purpose of rendering economic assistance to countries outside the United Kingdom (see s 1(2)). The arrangements that may be so made are arrangements for providing financial facilities or assistance for, or for the benefit of, persons carrying on business; and the facilities or assistance may be provided in any form, including guarantees, insurance, grants or loans: s 1(4). These powers are exercised by the Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) whose functions in relation to short-term export credit insurance were privatised in December 1991. As to the power to make a scheme for the transfer of functions see TRADE AND INDUSTRY vol 97 (2010) PARA 924 et seq. The ECGD maintains an internet site on the World Wide Web where details of its products and services may be found. At the date at which this title states the law, this site was accessible at www.ecgd.gov.uk.

For these purposes, 'guarantee' includes indemnity: s 4(3). As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 2 note 3. For these purposes, however, references to the United Kingdom include the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands: Export and Investment Guarantees Act 1991 s 4(4). See further TRADE AND INDUSTRY vol 97 (2010) PARA 918 et seq.

25 In admiralty cases, where a vessel has been arrested as a means of obtaining security, one method of obtaining its release is for the shipowner to arrange for his protection and indemnity ('P & I') insurers to provide a club guarantee. A P & I club guarantee is a letter of undertaking to pay any amount found to be due from the defendant and not paid by him and is usually accepted in lieu of bail or payment into court. As to P & I club guarantees and other forms of security in admiralty cases such as bail bonds see SHIPPING AND MARITIME LAW vol 93 (2008) PARA 171 et seq. As to applications for arrest see CPR 61.5; Practice Direction--Admiralty Claims PD61 PARA 5; and as to security in claims in rem see CPR 61.6.

Arrangements under the 1991 Act s 1(1) may be made in connection with goods or services supplied before the arrangements are made or in connection with goods or services which are to be, or which may be, supplied: s 1(1A) (added by 2009 Act s 2(1)).

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(i) The Nature of a Guarantee/A. DEFINITIONS/1014. The principal obligation.

1014. The principal obligation.

An agreement will not be a guarantee unless there exists or is contemplated some other, principal, obligation of some other, principal, obligor<sup>1</sup>, to which the guarantee is to be ancillary and subsidiary<sup>2</sup>. Although the principal obligation guaranteed is usually contractual, there can be a valid guarantee of non-contractual liabilities, such as those resulting from bailment, tort or unsatisfied judgments<sup>3</sup>.

Because a guarantee is an accessory contract, the principal obligation will not merge in the guarantee even if the principal obligation is merely a simple contract and the guarantee is made by deed<sup>4</sup>.

Unless the guarantee provides to the contrary<sup>5</sup>, the guarantee will be determined if the principal obligation is changed without the guarantor's consent<sup>6</sup> or if the principal obligation is itself determined<sup>7</sup>. Where, however, a lease is disclaimed as onerous property by a lessee's or assignee's trustee in bankruptcy or liquidator, it does not come to an end for all purposes<sup>8</sup>. Thus where a company is the original tenant, the liability of persons who have guaranteed the due payment of rent under the lease and the performance of other covenants contained in it is not affected by such disclaimer, although the guarantor's obligations will cease once the landlord retakes possession<sup>9</sup>; and similarly, a guarantor's contractual obligation to take up a new lease in the event of a liquidator of the tenant company disclaiming the lease survives disclaimer but comes to an end on the landlord retaking possession<sup>10</sup>.

1 If this is a contract of guarantee, the background must be one in which there is a principal debtor and a secondary debtor: General Surety and Guarantee Co Ltd v Francis Parker Ltd (1977) 6 BLR 16 at 21 per Donaldson J. There can be no suretyship unless there be a principal debtor, who of course may be constituted in the course of a transaction by matters ex post facto, and need not be so at the time, but until there is a principal debtor there can be no suretyship; nor can a person guarantee anybody else's debt unless there is a debt of some other person to be guaranteed: Lakeman v Mountstephen (1874) LR 7 HL 17 at 24-25 per Lord Selborne LC.

2 A guarantee is essentially a contract of an accessory nature, being always ancillary and subsidiary to some other contract or liability on which it is founded, without the support of which it must fail: see Mountstephen v Lakeman (1871) LR 7 QB 196 at 202, Ex Ch, per Willes J; affd sub nom Lakeman v Mountstephen (1874) LR 7 HL 17. 4 White v Cuyler (1795) 6 Term Rep 176; Clarke v Henty (1838) 3 Y & C Ex 187 at 189 per Lord Abinger CB. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(i) The Nature of a Guarantee/A. DEFINITIONS/1015. The principal debtor.

1015. The principal debtor.

The person primarily liable to the creditor for the obligation guaranteed is usually referred to as the principal debtor<sup>1</sup>.

Although sometimes bound by the same instrument as his guarantor, the principal debtor is not a party to the guarantor's contract to be answerable to the creditor. There is not necessarily any privity between the guarantor and the principal debtor; they do not constitute one person in law, and are not as such jointly liable to the creditor, with whom alone the guarantor contracts<sup>2</sup>.

The same person cannot be both sole principal debtor and guarantor<sup>3</sup>. However, one of two or more principal co-debtors will have some of the rights and liabilities of a guarantor<sup>4</sup> if it is agreed<sup>5</sup> between the co-debtors that the liability of one is to be secondary to that of the others<sup>6</sup>. Those rights and liabilities will exist between the co-debtors from the time that agreement is made<sup>7</sup>. In the absence of notice of the arrangement, however, the creditor is entitled to continue to treat all co-debtors as principals<sup>8</sup>. Once the creditor becomes aware<sup>9</sup> of the arrangement, he is obliged to respect the rights of the co-debtor who has assumed the position of guarantor<sup>10</sup>.

3 See Lakeman v Mountstephen (1874) LR 7 HL 17 at 24-25 per Lord Selborne LC, cited in PARA 1014 note 3. See also Re Smith, ex p Bright (1879) 10 ChD 566, CA, where the fact that consignees of goods guaranteed the payment of the purchase price of the goods to the consigning manufacturers established that the consignees were acting as agents for sale and were not themselves purchasing as principals: but cf Heisler v Anglo-Dal Ltd [1954] 2 All ER 770, [1954] 1 WLR 1273, CA, discussed in PARA 1013 note 21.

4 In such circumstances, there is suretyship in equity though not at common law: Wauthier v Wilson (1912) 28 TLR 239, CA.

5 The agreement may be express or implied and may be made at or before the time the principal obligation is undertaken, or at any time thereafter: see Rouse v Bradford Banking Co [1894] AC 586, HL.

6 Where a person incurs a joint liability with others, having done so only for the purpose of providing security for them, he will nevertheless not thereby be severally liable as a surety: Other v Iveson (1855) 3 Drew 177 at 182 per Kindersley V-C; and see Jones v Beach (1852) 2 De GM & G 886; Rawstone v Parr (1827) 3 Russ 539;

In such circumstances, and also where two joint debtors subsequently agree, to the knowledge of the creditor, that one shall be surety only for the other (see Rouse v Bradford Banking Co [1894] AC 586, HL; Oakeley v Pasheller (1836) 4 Cl & Fin 207, HL; Ashbee v Pidduck (1836) 1 M & W 564; and see PARA 1130), the suretyship created, while it obliges the creditor to respect the rights of the surety (see eg Rouse v Bradford Banking Co above at 598 per Lord Watson; Duncan, Fox & Co v North and South Wales Bank (1880) 6 App Cas 1 at 12, HL), leaves the surety still a joint debtor although possessed of certain surety's rights. Cases of joint liability are outside the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4: see PARA 1059.

9 It is not necessary that the principal debtor should consent to the arrangement, only that he should have notice of it, for the guarantor's rights in these circumstances are rights which arise in equity and not from contract; see eg Rouse v Bradford Banking Co [1894] AC 586, HL. To the extent that York City and County Banking Co v Bainbridge (1880) 43 LT 732 suggests the contrary, it is probably no longer good law. However, the creditor may (and often does) exclude the guarantor's equitable rights by the express terms of the guarantee: see PARAS 1216-1217.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(i) The Nature of a Guarantee/A. DEFINITIONS/1016. The creditor.

1016. The creditor.

The person to whom the obligations of the principal debtor and the guarantor are owed is usually referred to as the creditor<sup>1</sup>.

The same person cannot be both creditor and surety<sup>2</sup>.

1 The obligation guaranteed need not, however, be a debt: see PARA 1013 note 6.

2 The Law of Property Act 1925 s 82 abrogated the common law rule that a covenant or agreement between a person and himself and others jointly was void and unenforceable: see DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS vol 13 (2007 Reissue) PARA 264. Even so, it is doubtful whether a person can guarantee the payment of a debt which is due to himself and others jointly: see Re Hoyle, Hoyle v Hoyle [1893] 1 Ch 84 at 97, 99, CA.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(i) The Nature of a Guarantee/A. DEFINITIONS/1017. The guarantor.

1017. The guarantor.

The person who engages with the creditor of a third party to be answerable, in the second degree<sup>1</sup>, for some debt, default or miscarriage<sup>2</sup> for which the third party then is, or may or is intended to become, primarily liable to the creditor is called the guarantor<sup>3</sup> or surety<sup>4</sup>.

The assumption of personal liability is not a necessary element in suretyship. A person who provides a pledge or security for the performance of another's obligation makes himself a surety for that other by means of that pledge or security, just as much as if he pledges his personal credit<sup>5</sup>.

1 The liability is 'secondary' whenever the promise to be answerable for another leaves that other primarily liable: Mallet v Bateman (1865) LR 1 CP 163, Ex Ch. The primary liability need not, however, be legally enforced before having recourse to the surety unless the surety has so stipulated: see PARA 1104. See also Johannesburg Municipal Council v D Stewart & Co (1902) Ltd (1909) 47 SLR 20, HL.

2 The words 'debt, default or miscarriage' are taken from the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4: see PARA 1013 note 6, PARA 1052.

3 In English legal usage, the words 'guarantor' and 'surety' are interchangeable. However, in many American jurisdictions, the terms are distinguished to signify different types of obligation undertaken: see Laurence Simpson Handbook of the Law of Suretyship (1950) and WT Rawleigh Co v Oversteet 32 SE 2d 574 (1944). Here 'guarantor' is generally used unless the context requires otherwise.

4 A person generally takes the position of guarantor from a desire to assist the principal debtor, and not as the result of any distinct bargain between him and the creditor, or in consideration of any direct remuneration passing to him from the creditor: Seaton v Heath, Seaton v Burnand [1899] 1 QB 782 at 793, CA, per Romer LJ; revsd, without reference to this point, sub nom Seaton v Burnand, Burnand v Seaton [1900] AC 135, HL; and see Ex p Minet (1807) 14 Ves 189 at 190 per Lord Eldon LC. In an old Scottish case it was held to be an unlawful agreement for the cautioner (the guarantor) to stipulate for a valuable consideration: King v Ker (1711) 23 Mor Dict 9461; and see PARA 1047 et seq, dealing with the consideration for the guarantor's promise. A pledge or surety was, originally, a hostage delivered over to slavery, but subject to redemption: see 2 Pollock and Maitland's History of English Law at 186, 189, 209 and 211. The relationship between the guarantor and the creditor remained, juristically, that of the body-pledge down to the end of the thirteenth century, although the nature of the relation was obscured by the fact that the creditor had recourse to the surety's property rather than his person upon default: see T Hewitson Suretyship: Its Origin and History in Outline (1927) at p 118; and WD Morgan 'The History and Economics of Suretyship' (1927) 12 Corn LQ 153.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(i) The Nature of a Guarantee/A. DEFINITIONS/1018. Classes of suretyship.

1018. Classes of suretyship.

It is important to distinguish between three kinds of case to which the principles of the law of guarantees may apply:

- 56 (1) those in which there is an agreement to constitute, for a particular purpose, the relation of principal debtor and guarantor, to which agreement the creditor secured by it is a party;
- 57 (2) those in which there is a similar agreement between the principal debtor and guarantor only, to which the creditor is a stranger; and
- 58 (3) those in which, without any such contract of guarantee, there is a primary and a secondary liability of two persons for one and the same debt, the debt being, as between the two, that of one of those persons only, and not of both, so that the other, if he should be compelled to pay it, would be entitled to reimbursement from the person by whom (as between the two) it ought to have been paid<sup>1</sup>.

It is only to the first of these classes that the doctrines evolved in equity for the protection of guarantors apply in their full extent<sup>2</sup>. Only in the first two of these classes is there any contract of guarantee. However, the relationship between the primary and secondary obligor in cases in the third class is sufficiently analogous to that of principal and surety to bring some of those doctrines into effect. In particular, if the person secondarily liable pays the debt to the creditor, he is not only entitled to reimbursement from the person principally liable, but also to take over by subrogation any securities or rights which the creditor may have against the person primarily liable<sup>3</sup>.

1 Duncan, Fox & Co v North and South Wales Bank (1880) 6 App Cas 1 at 10-11, HL, per Lord Selborne LC.

3 Re Downer Enterprises Ltd [1974] 2 All ER 1074 at 1082, [1974] 1 WLR 1460 at 1468. This right of reimbursement, which carries with it the right of subrogation, is not confined to the case of a guarantee, but applies in any case where there is a primary and secondary liability for the same debt: Re Downer Enterprises Ltd. See also Selous Street Properties Ltd v Oronel Fabrics Ltd [1984] 1 EGLR 50, 270 Estates Gazette 643; Becton Dickinson UK Ltd v Zwebner [1989] QB 208, [1988] 3 WLR 1376; and PARA 1020 note 4.

1019. Instances where suretyship arises.

The acceptor of an accommodation bill is a guarantor for the payment by the drawer. If the holder, knowing that the acceptor is an accommodation acceptor, enters into a binding agreement with the drawer to give time for payment, the acceptor is thereby discharged<sup>1</sup>, unless either the accommodation party consents to the giving of time<sup>2</sup> or the holder expressly reserves his rights against the accommodation party when time is given<sup>3</sup>. Similarly the maker of an accommodation note is in the position of a guarantor, with all the guarantor's rights<sup>4</sup>.

Although the drawer of an ordinary bill of exchange is not strictly a guarantor for the acceptor, who is primarily liable<sup>5</sup>, the drawer may be in the nature of a guarantor<sup>6</sup>, and an indorser of a bill or note with notice of its dishonour becomes a guarantor to the holder for the acceptor or maker<sup>7</sup>, and entitled as such to the rights of a guarantor<sup>8</sup>. There is no distinction in this respect between the ordinary case of suretyship and that of suretyship arising out of a bill transaction<sup>9</sup>.

After the creditors have been notified of his retirement, a retired partner is in the position of a guarantor for the continuing members of the firm in respect of the partnership debts existing at the time of his retirement<sup>10</sup>.

Persons who join in mortgages for the purpose of guaranteeing the payment of principal and interest, or of interest alone, and the performance of covenants entered into by the mortgagor are guarantors, and, as such, are entitled as against the mortgagor, on payment of the mortgage debt in whole or in part, to a charge on the mortgaged estate<sup>11</sup>, and to have the benefit of all the remedies and advantages which the mortgagee possessed against the mortgagor<sup>12</sup>.

A person who was not originally a guarantor may be converted into one without the creditor's consent<sup>13</sup>. A guarantor may also be converted into a principal debtor<sup>14</sup>. If so, he loses the rights he previously possessed as a surety<sup>15</sup>.

1020. Instances where suretyship does not arise.

Suretyship will not arise in every instance where there is a primary and secondary liability for the same obligation. So, even though there is a primary and secondary liability between the transferee and transferor of shares<sup>1</sup>, the relation between them is not that of principal debtor and guarantor<sup>2</sup>. An assignor of a lease granted before 1 January 1996<sup>3</sup> was not a guarantor, in the true sense of the term, for the assignee<sup>4</sup>. Nor is a mortgagor, who remains liable to the mortgagee after selling the mortgaged property, a guarantor for the purchaser<sup>5</sup>.

1 See the Insolvency Act 1986 s 74(2)(c); and COMPANY AND PARTNERSHIP INSOLVENCY vol 7(4) (2004 Reissue) PARA 705.

2 Roberts v Crowe (1872) LR 7 CP 629 (compromise with transferee by liquidator does not affect transferee's liability to indemnify transferor); Re Contract Corp'n, Hudson's Case (1871) LR 12 Eq 1; Helbert v Banner, Re Banned's Bank (1871) LR 5 HL 28 (compromise by liquidator of claim against transferee does not release transferor from liability as contributory).

3 Is a lease which is not a 'new tenancy' for the purposes of the Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995: see PARA 1081; and LANDLORD AND TENANT vol 27(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 578 et seq.

4 Baynton v Morgan (1888) 22 QBD 74, CA. As between the landlord and the original tenant, the liability of the original tenant was primary: Warnford Investments Ltd v Duckworth [1979] Ch 127, [1978] 2 All ER 517. However, as between the original tenant and his assignee, the liability of the assignee (and of any guarantor for the assignee) to pay the rent and to perform the tenant's covenants was primary or ultimate: see Re Downer Enterprises Ltd [1974] 2 All ER 1074 at 1083-1084, [1974] 1 WLR 1460 at 1470; Selous Street Properties Ltd v Oronel Fabrics Ltd [1984] 1 EGLR 50, 270 Estates Gazette 643; Kumar v Dunning [1989] QB 193 at 201, [1987] 2 All ER 801 at 807, CA. If the assignor paid rent for which the assignee was liable, he was subrogated to the landlord's rights and was entitled to be indemnified by the assignee or by any guarantor for the assignee: Becton Dickinson UK Ltd v Zwebner [1989] QB 208, [1988] 3 WLR 1376. See also Johns v Pink [1900] 1 Ch 296; PARA 1259; and LANDLORD AND TENANT vol 27(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 573.

B. GUARANTEE DISTINGUISHED FROM OTHER CONTRACTS

1021. Guarantee and indemnity.

Contracts of guarantee and contracts of indemnity may perform similar commercial functions, in providing compensation to the creditor for the failure of a third party to perform his obligation. However, there is a conceptual distinction between a contract of guarantee and a contract of indemnity, in that under a contract of indemnity, the indemnifier undertakes an independent obligation which does not depend upon the existence of any other obligation of any other obligor<sup>1</sup>. A contract of indemnity is a contract by one party to keep the other harmless against loss<sup>2</sup>. It has no necessary reference in law to the obligation of any third persons<sup>3</sup>.

By contrast<sup>4</sup>, there can be no contract of guarantee unless there exists or is contemplated some other, principal, obligation of some other, principal, obligor, to which the guarantee is ancillary and subsidiary<sup>5</sup>. Under a contract of guarantee, the guarantor assumes a secondary liability to the creditor for the default of another who remains primarily liable to the creditor<sup>6</sup>.

Whether a contract is one of guarantee or of indemnity is a question of construction in each case<sup>7</sup>. In doubtful cases, the fact that the parties have described their agreement as an 'indemnity' or as a 'guarantee' may provide some guide, especially if the expression is used in the heading<sup>8</sup>, or is repeated a number of times in the body of the agreement<sup>9</sup>. Another guide is whether the creditor's rights against the principal debtor and against the indemnifier or guarantor are the same. If the person liable under the agreement is liable even though the principal debtor is not in default<sup>10</sup>, or is liable for a greater amount than the principal debtor<sup>11</sup>, the agreement will probably be construed as an indemnity. On the other hand, the inclusion of a clause preserving the creditor's rights against the person liable under the agreement in the event of the creditor's giving time to the principal debtor, or varying the principal obligation, suggests that the contract is a guarantee<sup>12</sup>. There is authority that an undertaking to meet a loss which is incidental to the overall transaction will generally be an indemnity but, where the payment obligation is the central feature of the contract, it is more likely to constitute a guarantee<sup>13</sup>.

Agreements whose provisions are mainly those of a guarantee sometimes contain clauses which preserve the liability of the guarantor in circumstances where the principal debtor has either never been<sup>14</sup>, or has ceased to be, liable to the creditor, and clauses entitling the creditor to treat the guarantor as a principal debtor, either generally or in specific circumstances<sup>15</sup>. The inclusion of such clauses probably does not convert what would otherwise be a guarantee into an indemnity<sup>16</sup>. However, it may be that contracts which include such clauses should properly be regarded as hybrid in nature<sup>17</sup>.

NOTE 13--Pitts, cited, reported at [2008] 1 All ER 941.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(i) The Nature of a Guarantee/B. GUARANTEE DISTINGUISHED FROM OTHER CONTRACTS/1022. Contracts of insurance.

1022. Contracts of insurance.

The insurer under a contract of insurance agrees, in consideration of the payment to him of a premium, to pay a specified sum to the insured upon the happening of a specified event<sup>1</sup>. Where that event is a default by a debtor or obligor, the contract bears a striking resemblance to a guarantee<sup>2</sup>, both in substance and in economic function. However, there are distinctions between the nature of the two types of contract, and between the obligations which they create.

An insurer under a contract of insurance, like an indemnifier under a contract of indemnity, undertakes a principal rather than a secondary obligation to the creditor<sup>3</sup>. An insurer's liability is not dependent upon the existence of a third person's liability, whereas a contract cannot be a guarantee unless it is ancillary to the primary obligation of another person, to which the guarantor's liability is secondary<sup>4</sup>.

As a result, events such as the termination or variation of the principal obligation, which might discharge a surety<sup>5</sup>, will not generally discharge an insurer from his liability<sup>6</sup>.

A contract of insurance is a contract of the utmost good faith<sup>7</sup>. Contracts of guarantee are not subject to this doctrine, although there is a limited duty of disclosure<sup>8</sup>.

It has been said that there is no magic in the words 'insurance' or 'guarantee', and many contracts may with equal propriety be referred to by either name<sup>9</sup>. The substance and not the form of the transaction is decisive. The mere fact that a contract is in the form of an insurance policy<sup>10</sup> or that the party contracting as guarantor is an insurance company<sup>11</sup>, will not prevent the contract from being a contract of guarantee. Equally, a contract described as an 'indemnity guarantee' may in fact be a contract of insurance<sup>12</sup>.

Phillips J, applying the definition in PARA 1013, held that the bond was in the nature of a guarantee. The Court of Appeal decided that it was not, holding that the nature of the bond defied tidy categorisation. As Nolan LJ put it, 'It stands in a class of its own which, in the light of the deficiencies in its terms which Lord Justice Parker has listed, is just as well.'

(ii) Essentials of a Guarantee

A. AGREEMENT

1023. Making the agreement.

As in the case of any other contract, a valid guarantee requires a sufficient agreement<sup>1</sup>. This is usually reached by the process of offer and acceptance and, where this is so, the law requires that there be an offer on ascertainable terms which receives an unqualified acceptance from the person to whom it is made<sup>2</sup>.

- 2 See CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 631.

5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(ii) Essentials of a Guarantee/A. AGREEMENT/1024. Offer.

1024. Offer.

Whether a statement amounts to an offer capable of being converted by acceptance into a binding contract of guarantee depends upon the words used and the context in which they are used. A statement that the offeror has no objection to guaranteeing has been held to be a mere invitation to treat<sup>1</sup>. By contrast, a statement of willingness to guarantee a particular shipment has been held to be a sufficient guarantee in the light of the dealings between the parties<sup>2</sup>. Words which are too vague cannot amount to a guarantee<sup>3</sup>.

To amount to a guarantee, the offer must be addressed to the creditor<sup>4</sup>. An offer, not addressed to any individual creditor, to contribute to the assets of the principal debtor is not a guarantee<sup>5</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(ii) Essentials of a Guarantee/A. AGREEMENT/1025. Revocation of the offer.

1025. Revocation of the offer.

A guarantor's promise, unless made by deed, does not bind him until the promisee has accepted it<sup>1</sup>. A guarantee not made as a deed may therefore be revoked at any time before it has been accepted, provided that the revocation is communicated to the offeree<sup>2</sup>. This is so even though the offeror has indicated that he will keep his offer open for a specified time<sup>3</sup>.

If the guarantor dies before his offer has been accepted, the offer is revoked<sup>4</sup>.

1 Eg by fulfilling the prescribed conditions: Westhead v Sproson (1861) 6 H & N 728; Glyn v Hertel (1818) 8 Taunt 208; Offord v Davies (1862) 12 CBNS 748; Hartland v Jukes (1863) 1 H & C 667; and see Mayhew v Crickett (1818) 2 Swan 185 at 191, 193. It is not accurate to describe a guarantee as a unilateral contract, although it is sometimes so named: Wynne v Hughes (1873) 21 WR 628 at 629 per Bramwell B. It is in fact an instance of a contract with an executed consideration, taking the form of a request to perform the consideration followed by the performing of the consideration according to the request.

Where the offeror has contracted to keep his offer open, revocation of that offer will amount to a breach of the contract of option: see CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARAS 640, 644.

4 See Dickinson v Dodds (1876) 2 ChD 463 at 475 per Mellish LJ (where the contract in question was not a contract of guarantee); and CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 648.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(ii) Essentials of a Guarantee/A. AGREEMENT/1026. Acceptance.

1026. Acceptance.

Unless the offer contemplates an express acceptance<sup>1</sup>, acceptance of a guarantee may be inferred<sup>2</sup>.

Generally speaking, therefore, where a guarantee is given to enable a third person to obtain a supply of goods on credit, or advances of money, or an appointment to some office or employment, no other acceptance of the guarantor's offer is necessary than the subsequent supply of the goods<sup>3</sup>, the making of the advances<sup>4</sup> or the appointment to the office or employment<sup>5</sup>.

Where no time limit is fixed, the acceptance must be given within a reasonable time<sup>6</sup>, must be absolute and unqualified<sup>7</sup>, and, in case of alternative offers, the acceptance should state which is accepted<sup>8</sup>.

B. INTENTION TO CREATE LEGAL RELATIONS

1027. The principle.

An agreement of guarantee, even if supported by consideration, is not binding as a contract if it is made without any intention of creating legal relations<sup>1</sup>. In the case of an ordinary commercial transaction there is a presumption that the parties intended to create legal relations<sup>2</sup>. Where the transaction is a commercial one, the onus of proving that there was no such intention is on the party who asserts that no legal effect was intended, and the onus is a heavy one<sup>3</sup>. Nevertheless, a guarantee contained solely in a 'subject to contract' proposal will not usually be legally binding<sup>4</sup>.

1 Kleinwort Benson Ltd v Malaysia Mining Corp Bhd [1989] 1 All ER 785 at 788, [1989] 1 WLR 379 at 383, CA, per Ralph Gibson LJ. A unilateral offer of a guarantee contained in a document marked 'subject to contract' is not an offer capable of acceptance so as to conclude an agreement: see Carlton Communications plc v Football League [2002] EWHC 1650 (Comm), [2002] All ER (D) 01 (Aug). A general, verbal assurance may be insufficient: see Manches LLP v Freer [2006] EWHC 991 (QB), [2006] All ER (D) 428 (Nov).

2 Rose and Frank Co v JR Crompton & Bros Ltd [1923] 2 KB 261 at 294, CA, per Atkin LJ (decision partly revsd [1925] AC 445, HL).

3 Edwards v Skyways Ltd [1964] 1 All ER 494 at 500, [1964] 1 WLR 349 at 355 per Megaw J. To decide whether legal effect was intended, the courts normally apply an objective test. They 'will attach weight (a) to the importance of the agreement to the parties, and (b) to the fact that one of them has acted in reliance upon it . . . In the search for agreed terms of a commercial transaction, businessmen may adopt language of deliberate equivocation in the hope that all will go well. It may, therefore, be artificial to try to ascertain the common intention of the parties as to the legal effect of such a claim if in fact their common intention was that the claim should have such effect as a judge or arbitrator should decide': Kleinwort Benson Ltd v Malaysia Mining Corp Bhd [1989] 1 All ER 785 at 788-789, [1989] 1 WLR 379 at 383, CA, per Ralph Gibson LJ.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(ii) Essentials of a Guarantee/B. INTENTION TO CREATE LEGAL RELATIONS/1028. Letters of comfort.

1028. Letters of comfort.

The problem of deciding whether the parties intended to create legal relations frequently occurs in the context of letters of comfort<sup>1</sup>. A comfort letter is a letter written usually by a parent company or a government to the lender giving comfort to the lender about a loan made to a subsidiary or a public entity<sup>2</sup>. The concept extends to or includes a document under which comfort is given to the lender by the assumption not of a legal responsibility but of a moral responsibility only<sup>3</sup>.

In order to ascertain whether the parties intended a comfort letter to have legal effect, the terms of the document in question must be considered in the light of the surrounding circumstances<sup>4</sup>. The use of the expression 'comfort letter' may be an indication that the parties did not intend the document to have contractual effect, as may be the absence from the document of any express words of warranty or of promise<sup>5</sup>. A prior refusal to provide a legally binding guarantee may also be taken into account as a relevant circumstance<sup>6</sup>.

C. CAPACITY TO CONTRACT

1029. Insanity and drunkenness.

Capacity to contract is as essential to the validity of a guarantee as it is to that of any other contract<sup>1</sup>.

Where, therefore, a guarantor lacks the mental capacity to contract, the guarantee is voidable at his option provided that the promisee was aware of the promisor's incapacity<sup>2</sup>. Even if the creditor was not aware of the guarantor's lack of mental capacity at the time that the guarantee was made, he can no longer rely upon it as a continuing guarantee in relation to further advances once he learns of the guarantor's incapacity<sup>3</sup>.

A guarantee given by a guarantor who at the time of contracting was so extremely drunk as to be incapable of understanding what he was doing is similarly voidable at his option, for the drunkard's condition will usually be apparent to the creditor<sup>4</sup>.

1030. Minors.

A minor<sup>1</sup> does not have the legal capacity to enter into a contract of guarantee<sup>2</sup>. A contract of guarantee entered into by a minor is accordingly unenforceable<sup>3</sup> against him<sup>4</sup>.

Where a guarantee is given in respect of an obligation of a party to a contract and the obligation is unenforceable against him, or he repudiates the contract, because he was a minor when the contract was made, the guarantee is not for that reason alone unenforceable against the guarantor<sup>5</sup>.

1 The age of majority is 18; see generally, as to the attaining of full age and a child's capacity to contract, CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1 et seq.

2 For the rights and liabilities of minors in respect of contracts to which they become a party see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARA 12 et seq. It is unlikely that such a contract could ever be regarded as being for the minor's benefit: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARA 12.

3 The Infants Relief Act 1874 (repealed: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARA 14) provided that contracts of loan, contracts for goods other than necessities, and contracts for accounts stated entered into by a minor were 'absolutely void': and the expression 'void' was used in some old cases to describe the status of contracts by minors. However, in those old cases 'void' probably meant only 'incapable of being enforced' against the minor, and not 'devoid of all legal effect': see Williams v Moor (1843) 11 M & W 256 at 263-266 per Parke B.

4 Re Davenport, ex p Bankrupt v Eric Street Properties Ltd [1963] 2 All ER 850, [1963] 1 WLR 817, CA. In that case Lord Denning MR stated that the guarantee 'was void and could not be ratified' upon the guarantor's attaining the age of majority. See also Beam v Beatty (No 2) (1902) 4 OLR 554 at 559 per Garrow JA. Sed quaere, following the repeal of the Infants Relief Act 1874 s 2 by the Minors' Contracts Act 1987 s 1. At common law, the general principle was that a minor would become liable on a contract of this kind if he ratified it after reaching full age, even though there was no consideration for the new promise: Southerton v Whitlock (1726) 2 Stra 690; Williams v Moor (1843) 11 M & W 256. However, exceptionally, a penal bond was regarded as void and incapable of ratification: Baylis v Dineley (1815) 3 M & S 477; Walter v Everard [1891] 2 QB 369, CA.

5 Minors' Contracts Act 1987 s 2. Section 2 applies only where the principal obligation guaranteed is that of a party to a contract made after 9 June 1987: ss 2(a), 5(2). Prior to the coming into force of the 1987 Act, a loan to a minor was made void by statute: Infants Relief Act 1874 ss 1, 2 (repealed). The guarantors of such a loan, where the fact of the minority was known to all parties, could not be made liable on the guarantee: Coutts & Co v Browne-Lecky [1947] KB 104, [1946] 2 All ER 207, following Swan v Bank of Scotland (1836) 10 Bli NS 627, HL, where a bank was precluded by statute from recovering against the principal debtor because it had knowingly honoured unstamped drafts, and not following the decision of Pickford J in Wauthier v Wilson (1911) 27 TLR 582; affd on other grounds (1912) 28 TLR 239, CA. A contract to repay money lent to a minor was, however, always enforceable if on its true construction it was a contract of indemnity by which the contractor incurred an original and independent liability as a principal debtor, as distinct from a mere guarantee: see Harris v Huntbach (1757) 1 Burr 373; Duncomb v Tickridge (1648) Aleyn 94; Wauthier v Wilson (1912) 28 TLR 239, CA (explained in Coutts & Co v Browne-Lecky above). For an example of an indemnity collateral to a hire purchase agreement entered into by a minor see Yeoman Credit Ltd v Latter [1961] 2 All ER 294, [1961] 1 WLR 828, CA.

1031. Corporations.

The validity of an act done by a company<sup>1</sup>, such as the giving of a guarantee, cannot be called into question on the ground of lack of capacity by reason of anything in the company's memorandum<sup>2</sup>. In favour of a person dealing with<sup>3</sup> a company in good faith<sup>4</sup>, the power of the board of directors to bind the company, or to authorise others to do so, is deemed to be free of any limitation<sup>5</sup> under the company's constitution<sup>6</sup>. A party to a transaction with a company, such as a guarantee, is not bound to inquire as to whether it is permitted by the company's memorandum or as to any limitation on the powers of the board of directors to bind the company or authorise others to do so<sup>7</sup>.

In other cases, if a guarantee is beyond the scope of the constitution of a corporation, it is ultra vires and void from its inception<sup>8</sup>.

Except in limited circumstances, a company may not give a guarantee in connection with a purchase or proposed purchase of its own shares<sup>9</sup>.

Although a promise that a corporation shall do something beyond its legal powers is void<sup>10</sup>, a guarantee by an individual for the performance by a corporation of an ultra vires contract may be enforceable if the transaction was entered into in good faith and the contract is not illegal or contrary to public policy<sup>11</sup>.

1   le a company formed and registered under the Companies Act 1985 or under any of the former Companies Acts (other than the Joint Stock Companies Act 1844), but excluding any company registered under the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908 or earlier legislation in what was then Ireland: Companies Act 1985 s 735(1) (prospectively repealed) (as to replacement provisions see the Companies Act 2006 ss 1(1), 1171). This definition excludes companies incorporated abroad: cf Re International Bulk Commodities [1993] Ch 77 at 84-85, [1993] 1 All ER 361 at 365-366, [1992] BCLC 1074 at 1078-1079 per Mummery J. See generally COMPANIES.

2   See the Companies Act 1985 s 35(1) (s 35 substituted, and ss 35A, 35B added, by the Companies Act 1989 s 108(1)) (the Companies Act 1985 ss 35-35B prospectively repealed) (as to replacement provisions see the Companies Act 2006 ss 39, 40). The application of the Companies Act 1985 s 35 (prospectively repealed) to acts done by the company presupposes that either the agent doing the act has authority to bind the company, or the company ratifies his act. It remains the duty of the directors to observe any limitation on their powers flowing from the company's memorandum: see the Companies Act 1985 s 35(3) (as so substituted; prospectively repealed).

3   A person deals with a company if he is party to any transaction or other act to which the company is a party: Companies Act 1985 s 35A(2)(a) (as added (see note 2); prospectively repealed). See note 2.

4   A person is not to be regarded as acting in bad faith by reason only of his knowing that an act is beyond the powers of the directors under the company's constitution; and a person is presumed to have acted in good faith unless the contrary is proved: Companies Act 1985 s 35A(2)(b), (c) (as added (see note 2); prospectively repealed). See note 2.

5   le including limitations deriving from a resolution of the company in general meeting or a meeting of any class of shareholders, or from any agreement between members of the company or of any class of shareholders: Companies Act 1985 s 35A(3) (as added (see note 2); prospectively repealed). See note 2. Prior to the enactment of these provisions, it was held that the directors of a company could not bind the company by a guarantee given by them in the absence of proof of authority to do so: Re Era Life Assurance Society [1866] WN 309; and see Colman v Eastern Counties Rly Co (1846) 10 Beav 1; Ridley v Plymouth Grinding and Baking Co; Kingsbridge Flour Mill Co v Plymouth Grinding and Baking Co (1848) 2 Exch 711; Re Cunningham & Co Ltd, Simpson's Claim (1887) 36 ChD 532. A general power of management was sufficient authority if the giving of the guarantee was fairly within the scope of the company's business (Re West of England Bank, ex p Booker (1880) 14 ChD 317), but not otherwise (Small v Smith (1884) 10 App Cas 119, HL). NOTE 9--Repeal of Companies Act 1985 ss 151-153, 156, 158 in force 1 October 2009 for remaining purposes: SI 2008/2860.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(ii) Essentials of a Guarantee/C. CAPACITY TO CONTRACT/1032. Transactions involving directors.

1032. Transactions involving directors.

If the board of directors of a company<sup>1</sup> exceeds any limitation<sup>2</sup> on its powers under the company's constitution in connection with a transaction<sup>3</sup> to which a director<sup>4</sup> of the company or of its holding company<sup>5</sup> or any person connected with such a director or a company with whom such director is associated<sup>6</sup> is a party, the transaction is voidable at the instance of the company<sup>7</sup>.

A company may not give a guarantee<sup>8</sup> or provide security in connection with a loan made by any person to a director (including a shadow director<sup>9</sup>) of the company or of its holding company unless the transaction has been approved by a resolution of the members of the holding company<sup>10</sup>. A relevant company<sup>11</sup> may not make a loan or quasi-loan<sup>12</sup> to a director (including a shadow director) of the company or its holding company or a person connected with such director or enter into a credit transaction<sup>13</sup> as creditor for the benefit of a director (including shadow director) of a director of the company or of its holding company or a person connected with such a director, or give a guarantee or provide security in connection with a loan or quasi-loan or credit transaction made by or entered into any person to such a director (or shadow director) or person connected with such a director, unless the transaction has been approved by a resolution of the members of the company<sup>14</sup>.

1 See PARA 1031 note 1.

2 Ie including limitations deriving from a resolution of the company in general meeting or a meeting of any class of shareholders, or from any agreement between members of the company or of any class of shareholders: Companies Act 1985 s 322A(8) (s 322A added by the Companies Act 1989 s 109(1)) (the Companies Act 1985 s 322A prospectively repealed) (as to replacement provisions see the Companies Act 2006 s 41) (see COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 264.

3 'Transaction' includes any act: Companies Act 1985 s 322A(8) (as added (see note 2); prospectively repealed). This definition is sufficiently wide to include a guarantee. See note 2.

4 Including any person occupying the position of director, by whatever name called: see the Companies Act 2006 s 250 (formerly the Companies Act 1985 s 741(1)); and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 478.

5 As to the meaning of 'holding company' see the Companies Act 1985 ss 736, 736A (prospectively repealed) (as to replacement provisions see the Companies Act 2006 s 1159, Sch 6); and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 25.

6 As to the meaning of 'connected' and 'associated' see the Companies Act 2006 ss 252-255 (formerly the Companies Act 1985 s 346); and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARAS 481-482.

7 Companies Act 1985 s 322A(1), (2) (as added (see note 2); prospectively repealed). A person who is a party to the transaction but who is not a director of the company or of its holding company or a person connected with such a director or a company with whom such director is associated may still rely upon s 35A (prospectively repealed) (see PARA 1031): but where a transaction is voidable under s 322A (prospectively repealed) and valid by virtue of s 35A (prospectively repealed) in favour of such a person, the court may make such order affirming, severing or setting aside the transaction on such terms as appear to be just: s 322A(7) (as so added; prospectively repealed). See note 2.

8 For this purpose, 'guarantee' includes indemnity: see the Companies Act 1985 s 331(2) (repealed as from 1 October 2007 subject to transitional provisions).

9 A 'shadow director' is a person in accordance with whose instructions the directors of the company are accustomed to act: see the Companies Act 2006 s 251(1), (2) (formerly the Companies Act 1985 s 741(2)); and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 479. However, a person is not deemed a shadow director by reason only that the directors act on advice given by him in a professional capacity: Companies Act 2006 s 251(2).

10 See the Companies Act 2006 ss 197(1), 223(1) (formerly the Companies Act 1985 s 330(2), (5)); and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARAS 561, 568.

11 Ie a company which (1) is a public company; or (2) a company associated with a public company: see the Companies Act 2006 s 198(1), 200(1) (formerly see the Companies Act 1985 s 331(6)); and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARAS 569-570.

12 A 'quasi-loan' is a transaction under which one party (the 'creditor') agrees to pay, or pays otherwise than in pursuance of an agreement, a sum for another (the 'borrower') or agrees to reimburse, or reimburses otherwise than in pursuance of an agreement expenditure incurred by another party for another (the 'borrower') on terms that the borrower (or a person on his behalf) will reimburse the creditor, or in circumstances giving rise to a liability on the borrower to reimburse the creditor: see the Companies Act 2006 s 199(1) (formerly the Companies Act 1985 s 331(3)); and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 569.

13 A 'credit transaction' is a transaction under which one party (the 'creditor') supplies goods or sells any land under a hire-purchase agreement or a conditional sale agreement or leases or hires any land or goods in return for periodical payments, or otherwise disposes of land or supplies goods or services on the understanding that payment (whether in a lump sum or instalments or by way of periodical payments or otherwise) is to be deferred: see the Companies Act 2006 s 202(1) (formerly the Companies Act 1985 s 331(7)); and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 571. See further CONSUMER CREDIT.

14 See the Companies Act 2006 ss 198(1), (2), 200(1), (2), 201(1), (2) (formerly the Companies Act 1985 s 330(3), (4)); and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARAS 569-571. A company may not enter into arrangements to achieve the same effect indirectly: see the Companies Act 2006 s 203(1) (formerly the Companies Act 1985 s 330(7)). The prohibition (ie without such approval) does not apply to certain other guarantees including relating to expenditure on company business, defending proceedings etc, regulatory action or investigation, minor and business transactions, intra group transactions, and money-lending companies: see the Companies Act 2006 ss 204-211; and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 568 et seq.

NOTES 2-6---Repeal of Companies Act 1985 ss 322A, 736, 736A in force 1 October 2009: SI 2008/2860.

D. VITIATING FACTORS

1033. Mistake.

A common mistake, substantially shared by both parties, and relating to facts as they existed at the time the contract was made, which renders the subject matter of the contract essentially and radically different from the subject matter which the parties reasonably believed to exist, may render an apparent contract of guarantee void at common law<sup>1</sup>. There is, however, no jurisdiction in equity to grant rescission of a contract on the ground of common mistake where that contract is valid and enforceable on ordinary principles of contract law<sup>2</sup>. Thus a party will not be allowed to evade performance of a contract such as a guarantee by the simple statement that he has made a mistake<sup>3</sup>. Nor will the doctrine of mistake avail a guarantor if the guarantee itself expressly or impliedly provides that he bears the risk of the relevant mistake<sup>4</sup>, or where the mistake consists of a belief entertained by him without reasonable grounds<sup>5</sup> or is otherwise the result of the guarantor's own fault<sup>6</sup>. A mutual mistake may, however, prevent there being a sufficient agreement between the parties to amount to a binding contract, particularly if the guarantor's mistake has been induced by the negligence of the creditor<sup>7</sup>.

A contract of guarantee will be voidable if the guarantor was, to the knowledge of the creditor<sup>8</sup>, under a fundamental mistake as to the nature or effect of the guarantee<sup>9</sup> or as to its subject matter<sup>10</sup> at the time when he entered into the guarantee<sup>11</sup>. In such circumstances, the guarantee may be set aside in whole or part, or may be rectified so as to accord with the guarantor's belief as to its terms<sup>12</sup>.

1 See Associated Japanese Bank (International) Ltd v Crédit du Nord SA [1988] 3 All ER 902 at 912-913, [1989] 1 WLR 255 at 268-269 per Steyn J, applying Bell v Lever Bros Ltd [1932] AC 161, HL. In Associated Japanese Bank (International) Ltd v Crédit du Nord SA above the defendants had guaranteed to the plaintiffs the obligations of a principal debtor under agreements for the sale and leaseback of industrial machines. Unknown to the plaintiffs and the defendants, the machines which were the subject of the transaction did not exist. Steyn J held that the non-existence of the machines, which were the defendants' principal security, rendered the subject matter of the guarantee essentially different from that which both parties reasonably believed it to be. He therefore held that the agreements of guarantee were void at common law for common mistake. He also held that it was an express condition precedent to the agreement of guarantee that the machines existed: cf De Brettes v Goodman (1855) 9 Moo PCC 466. As to mistake generally see CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 703 et seq; DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS vol 13 (2007 Reissue) PARAS 68, 71; and MISTAKE.

Thus a guarantor who signs a guarantee which gives full effect to the intentions of a creditor who, on the faith of the guarantee, supplies goods to the principal debtor cannot repudiate his liability by asserting that he (the guarantor) meant something which he has not stated: Haymen v Gover (1872) 25 LT 903 at 905. Where a written agreement is in clear and unambiguous terms, a party cannot be heard to say that he misunderstood it: Falck v Williams [1900] AC 176, PC; Small v Currie above at 114-115 per Kindersley V-C; on appeal (1854) 5 De GM & G 141. See also Stewart and McDonald v Young (1894) 38 Sol Jo 385 where Wills J said that a surety will not be relieved from liability because the language of the guarantee carries more than the parties may have contemplated, even though the court may be of opinion that, had the surety understood this, he would not have entered into the guarantee.

1034. Non est factum.

A person under a disability<sup>1</sup> who signs a document such as a guarantee, which is fundamentally different from the document which he thinks that he is signing, and who can prove that he did not fail to take the precautions which he ought to have taken to ascertain the contents or significance of the document, may be able to escape liability under the guarantee by relying upon the doctrine of non est factum<sup>2</sup>.

However, the strict application of these requirements, in particular the requirement that the guarantor must prove that he was not careless, means that the doctrine is of very limited application<sup>3</sup>. In modern times, cases in which persons who are adult and literate may successfully plead non est factum will be rare<sup>4</sup>.

1 The plea of non est factum is available in a proper case for the relief of a person who for permanent or temporary reasons (not limited to blindness or illiteracy) is not capable of both reading and sufficiently understanding the document to be signed: Saunders (Executrix of the Will of Gallie) v Anglia Building Society [1971] AC 1004 at 1034, [1970] 3 All ER 961 at 979, HL, per Lord Pearson.

1035. Misrepresentation.

Misrepresentation may be either written<sup>5</sup> or oral<sup>6</sup>. It usually consists of the direct assertion by the creditor<sup>7</sup> of a fact which is not a fact and which is calculated to influence a person becoming a guarantor<sup>8</sup>. However, it may also consist of statements by the creditor which tell only a misleading part of the truth<sup>9</sup>, or arise from the creditor's failure to correct a statement which he believed to be true when he made it but which he subsequently discovers to be untrue, or a statement which was true when made but which has subsequently become, to his knowledge, untrue<sup>10</sup>. Whether the non-disclosure of a fact amounts to a representation of its non-existence is, in every case, a question of fact dependent upon all the circumstances<sup>11</sup>.

The primary remedy for misrepresentation is rescission<sup>12</sup>. However, rescission may be refused and damages awarded in lieu if it is equitable to do so<sup>13</sup>, having regard to the nature of the misrepresentation and the loss that would be caused by it if the contract were upheld, as well as to the loss which rescission would cause to the other party<sup>14</sup>. The right to rescind may be lost by affirmation of the guarantee<sup>15</sup>, by the fact that the parties cannot be restored to their pre-contract positions<sup>16</sup>, and by the intervention of third party rights<sup>17</sup>. Damages may be awarded for loss caused by misrepresentation<sup>18</sup>. There are restrictions on the right to exclude or restrict liability for misrepresentation<sup>19</sup>.

1 See CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 767.

2 It may be that the requirement of materiality is to be applied less strictly in cases of gratuitous guarantee: see Davies v London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co (1878) 8 ChD 469 at 475 per Fry J, who said '... there is no consideration in this case, as in many cases of suretyship, for the contract entered into; and therefore I think ... it is a contract in respect of which a very little is sufficient. Very little said which ought not to have been said ... would be sufficient to prevent the contract being valid'. See also Bank of New South Wales v Rogers (1941) 65 CLR 42.

3 See National Bank of New Zealand v Macintosh (1881) 3 NZLR 217, where it was held that a statement that the principal debtor was 'all right and would be able to meet the liabilities' was a statement of opinion and not a statement of fact so to amount to a misrepresentation.

4 MacKenzie v Royal Bank of Canada [1934] AC 468 at 475, PC. For the applicable principles see generally the Misrepresentation Act 1967; and MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD.

8 Foster v Mackinnon (1869) LR 4 CP 704; Lewis v Clay (1897) 67 LJQB 224. Thus, if to a question asked by the proposed surety as to the existence of trade debts owing by the principal debtor the creditor's agent replies in the negative, when in point of fact there is one such debt owing, this amounts to misrepresentation (Blest v Brown (1862) 4 De GF & J 367), as does also a gratuitous assertion that an estate is free from incumbrances, other than those specifically mentioned, when in fact there is another and undisclosed incumbrance (Willis v Willis (1850) 17 Sim 218). See also Stone v Compton (1838) 5 Bing NC 142 (misleading statement that a sum owing by the principal debtor to the creditor had already been paid); M'Kewan v Thornton (1861) 2 F & F 594 (alleged misrepresentation as to the state of the principal debtor's account with the creditor bank).

Apart from these cases, mere silence is not in general misrepresentation: see Fox v Mackreth (1788) 2 Bro CC 400; on appeal (1791) 2 Cox Eq Cas 320 at 320-321 per Lord Thurlow; Bell v Lever Bros Ltd [1932] AC 161 at 227, HL, per Lord Atkin. It may be that the Misrepresentation Act 1967 applies only to representations that have in fact been made, not to those which the law deems to have been made: see Banque Keyser Ullman SA v Skandia (UK) Insurance Co Ltd [1990] 1 QB 665 at 760, sub nom Banque Financière de la Cité SA v Westgate Insurance Co Ltd [1989] 2 All ER 952 at 1004, CA (affd on different grounds [1991] 2 AC 249, [1990] 2 All ER 947, HL). 13 Except in cases of fraudulent misrepresentation: see the Misrepresentation Act 1967 s 2(2).

14 See the Misrepresentation Act 1967 s 2(2). In Ward v National Bank of New Zealand (1886) 4 NZLR 35, NZ CA, a guarantor was induced by misrepresentation to give a second guarantee in substitution for the first. The court refused to set the second guarantee aside except on terms that the guarantor restored the creditor bank to the position that it was in before the second guarantee was given.

1036. Non-disclosure and concealment.

An ordinary contract of guarantee, unlike a contract of insurance<sup>1</sup>, is not a contract of utmost good faith<sup>2</sup>, requiring full disclosure of all material facts by the contracting parties<sup>3</sup>. Where, however, a company which was the beneficiary of a guarantee for payment of its trading debts did not disclose to the guarantor its participation in a dishonest scheme to circumvent Russian exchange controls, the Privy Council held that the court's discretion to enforce the guarantee should not have been exercised<sup>4</sup>.

1 For the principle that insurance is a contract of utmost good faith see London Assurance v Mansel (1879) 11 ChD 363; Container Transport International Inc and Reliance Group Inc v Oceanus Mutual Underwriting Association (Bermuda) Ltd [1984] 1 Lloyd's Rep 476, CA; Pan Atlantic Insurance Co Ltd v Pine Top Insurance Co Ltd [1993] 1 Lloyd's Rep 496, CA; and INSURANCE vol 25 (2003 Reissue) PARAS 5, 36 et seq.

2 le uberrimae fidei. It was formerly held that a creditor's duty of disclosure when communicating with a surety was similar to that of a person seeking insurance: Owen v Homan (1851) 3 Mac & G 378 at 397.

3 Williams v Rawlinson (1825) 3 Bing 71 at 77 per Best CJ; Hamilton v Watson (1845) 12 Cl & Fin 109 at 118-119, HL, per Lord Campbell; North British Insurance Co v Lloyd (1854) 10 Exch 523; Wythes v Labouchere (1859) 3 De G & J 593; Lee v Jones (1864) 17 CBNS 482; Davies v London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co (1878) 8 ChD 469 at 475 per Fry J; London General Omnibus Co Ltd v Holloway [1912] 2 KB 72 at 81, CA, per Farwell LJ, and at 85-86 per Kennedy LJ. There is no magic in the use of the word 'insurance' or 'guarantee'; many contracts may with equal propriety be called by either term; whether the contract is one requiring uberrima fides depends upon its substantial character: see Seaton v Heath, Seaton v Burnand [1899] 1 QB 782 at 792, CA, per Romer LJ; revsd, without affecting this point, sub nom Seaton v Burnand, Burnand v Seaton [1900] AC 135, HL. See also Geest plc v Fyffes plc [1999] 1 All ER (Comm) 672 (in a contract of indemnity or guarantee, the potential beneficiary's duty is confined to a duty not to make express or implied misrepresentations and there is no general duty to disclose to the party about to give the guarantee or indemnity all facts material to that party's decision whether to enter into that contract).

4 See Far Eastern Shipping Co Public Ltd v Scales Trading Ltd [2001] 1 All ER (Comm) 319, [2000] All ER (D) 2034, PC. This case was applied (in a different context) in Lloyds TSB Bank plc v Shorney [2001] EWCA Civ 1161, [2001] All ER (D) 277 (Jul).

1037. Matters which need not be disclosed.

On the basis that an ordinary contract of guarantee is not one of utmost good faith<sup>1</sup>, it has been held that a creditor, who has not been specifically asked<sup>2</sup>, is under no duty to disclose to an intending surety the fact that the principal debtor is already overdrawn<sup>3</sup>, or the extent of that overdraft or other indebtedness to the creditor<sup>4</sup>, whether the principal debtor is in the habit of overdrawn<sup>5</sup>, how the principal debtor's account has been kept<sup>6</sup>, the fact that the principal debtor's account has been conducted in an irregular way<sup>7</sup>, whether the principal debtor has been punctual in his dealings<sup>8</sup>, the fact that the creditor bank has dishonoured cheques drawn by the principal debtor<sup>9</sup>, the fact that the principal debtor has previously defaulted<sup>10</sup>, the fact that the creditor is suspicious that the principal debtor has been defrauding him<sup>11</sup>, the fact that the husband of the principal debtor, who has authority to draw on the account to be guaranteed, is an undischarged bankrupt<sup>12</sup>, the fact that the manager of the creditor bank has 'taken partial control' of the principal debtor's business<sup>13</sup>, whether the principal debtor has performed his promises in an honourable manner<sup>14</sup>, the fact that the creditor intends to lend a further substantial sum on the faith of the guarantee<sup>15</sup>, or the fact that the guarantee is required because another guarantor wishes to retire<sup>16</sup>.

1     le uberrimae fidei. For the exceptional circumstances in which the creditor is obliged to make disclosure see PARA 1038 et seq.

2     If the intending guarantor is unacquainted with the risk he is undertaking he should inquire about it: Seaton v Heath, Seaton v Burnand [1899] 1 QB 782 at 793, CA, per Romer LJ; revsd without affecting this point, sub nom Seaton v Burnand, Burnand v Seaton [1900] AC 135, HL. As to the creditor's obligation to give proper answers to the guarantor's questions see PARA 1039.

3     As it is not a matter of presumption that a customer's account stands clear at the time the guarantee is given, the surety should inquire about it: Kirby v Duke of Marlborough (1813) 2 M & S 18 at 22 per Lord Ellenborough CJ. Where a bond is given for the continuance of an old bank account the guarantor will not be discharged by the non-disclosure of the fact of the principal debtor's having a balance against him duly secured at the date of the bond, as it is well known that such accounts are not carried on until the old balance has been secured: Williams v Rawlinson (1825) 3 Bing 71 at 77 per Best CJ. See also Westminster Bank Ltd v Cond (1940) 46 Com Cas 60; Lloyds Bank Ltd v Harrison (1925) 4 Legal Decisions Affecting Bankers 12, CA; Cooper v National Provincial Bank Ltd [1946] KB 1, [1945] 2 All ER 641; Commercial Bank of Australia Ltd v Amadio (1983) 151 CLR 447 at 455, 463, Aust HC. But cf Lee v Jones (1864) 17 CBNS 482, where the guarantee was of payments to be made by an agent to his merchant principals, and it was held that non-disclosure of existing arrears was in the circumstances evidence of fraud. 'It depends whether in such a transaction as that described in the agreement it might or might not naturally be expected that the matters might have allowed a balance of this extent to accumulate and might have allowed the amount to stand unsettled over so long a time': Lee v Jones at 505 per Blackburn J.

1038. Where disclosure is required.

There are four circumstances in which the creditor must make disclosure to an intending guarantor: (1) where the creditor is asked a specific question<sup>1</sup>; (2) where the bank would otherwise mislead the guarantor by volunteering only part of the truth<sup>2</sup>; (3) where the guarantor makes a statement in the creditor's presence that demonstrates that he entirely misunderstands the principal debtor's position<sup>3</sup>; and (4) where there is anything that might not naturally be expected to take place between the principal debtor and the creditor<sup>4</sup>.

Where a fiduciary advises his principal to enter into a guarantee he must prove affirmatively that the transaction in question is fair and that in the course of the negotiations he has made full disclosure of all facts material to the transaction<sup>5</sup>.

1039. The duty to answer questions.

It is the duty of a creditor to give a true, honest and accurate answer to any specific question directed to him by an intending guarantor which is in any way material to the giving of the guarantee<sup>1</sup>. If the creditor's answer is misleading, it may amount to a misrepresentation and so entitle the guarantor to avoid the guarantee<sup>2</sup>.

1 Westminster Bank Ltd v Cond (1940) 46 Com Cas 60 at 69. The creditor is not obliged to make inquiries in order to answer, merely to answer truthfully from the information which he has: Parsons v Barclay & Co Ltd and Goddard (1910) 103 LT 196, CA.

1040. Disclosure of special circumstances.

The creditor must disclose to an intending guarantor anything which might not naturally be expected to take place between the parties who are concerned in the transaction, namely whether there is a contract between the debtor and the creditor to the effect that the debtor's position is to be different from that which the guarantor might naturally expect<sup>1</sup>.

The omission to mention any such special fact is an implied representation to the intending guarantor that it does not exist<sup>2</sup>, entitling the guarantor upon discovering the true position to avoid the guarantee<sup>3</sup>.

1041. Matters which ought to be disclosed.

It depends on the circumstances of each case whether a fact not disclosed is such that it is impliedly represented not to exist<sup>1</sup>. In general, the guarantor should be informed of every private bargain between the creditor and the principal debtor varying the degree of the guarantor's responsibility<sup>2</sup>, and it may sometimes become necessary even to disclose the existence and nature of an agreement between the creditor and some person other than the principal debtor<sup>3</sup>.

It has, for example, been held that a creditor was obliged to disclose to an intending guarantor the existence of an agreement that part of the advance to be secured by the guarantee was to be applied to repay a pre-existing debt<sup>4</sup>. The guarantor was held to be discharged by the creditor's failure to disclose a further incumbrance, where an estate was conveyed to a person 'free from incumbrances' except those set out in a particular schedule, in consideration of that person and his guarantor doing certain things<sup>5</sup>. Where the creditor failed to disclose his understanding with the principal debtor that the promissory note, in which the guarantor had joined the principal debtor, should not be payable for five years but should bear interest at five per cent per annum, secured by a separate promissory note given by the principal debtor, the guarantor was also held to be discharged<sup>6</sup>. Similarly, the guarantor was held to be discharged where the creditor made a secret arrangement to take payment of his debt in full, the guarantee having been given to secure an advance to enable the debtor to pay a composition agreed by the general body of creditors<sup>7</sup>.

Extrinsic circumstances need only be disclosed in a contract uberimae fidei, but intrinsic circumstances must be disclosed in a contract of guarantee.

1042. Fidelity guarantees.

The nature of a fidelity guarantee gives rise to a more extensive disclosure than is required in the case of a guarantee for a bank or other cash account<sup>1</sup>. Where the guarantee is of the good behaviour of an employee, the omission of the employer to disclose to the intending guarantor any previous dishonesty or misconduct<sup>2</sup> of the employee in his employment of which the employer is aware will entitle the guarantor to avoid the guarantee<sup>3</sup>.

The guarantor will not be entitled to avoid the guarantee if he knows of the dishonesty or misconduct from another source, since in those circumstances there is no effective misrepresentation<sup>4</sup>.

Where the guarantee is a continuing guarantee, the duty of disclosure continues throughout the guaranteed employment. If the employer discovers that the employee has been dishonest, but continues to employ him without telling the guarantor, the guarantor will not be liable for any subsequent dishonesty by the employee<sup>5</sup>.

'There is a wide distinction between a case like the present and the cases . . . of guarantees for overdrafts given to bankers . . . The surety may well complain 'I did not know that your servant was a thief'; but he cannot be heard to complain 'I did not know your customer had been overdrawn his account or what the nature of his business was': London General Omnibus Co Ltd v Holloway at 82 per Farwell LJ. Fidelity guarantees are now rarely encountered. See further PARA 1133.

1043. Whether there is a duty to explain.

It has been stated that there is no special obligation upon a person to whom another is about to give a guarantee to explain the meaning or effect of the guarantee, any more than a person who is taking from another any other species of deed or instrument which is to enure to the benefit of the person taking it is under such obligation<sup>1</sup>. If, however, the creditor does give the intending guarantor any explanation, it must be sufficiently accurate and complete so as not to be misleading<sup>2</sup>. Furthermore, where the creditor is a bank or other large institution and the relationship between the debtor and the guarantor is non-commercial, the guarantee may be unenforceable on the grounds of undue influence exerted by the debtor unless the creditor can establish that it has taken reasonable steps to bring home to the guarantor, in a meaningful way, the practical implications of the proposed transaction and the risks he or she is running by standing as surety<sup>3</sup>. The steps to be taken by the creditor in such situations are discussed below<sup>4</sup>.

He also explained to her what he called the 'worst scenario', which was that the bank could take possession of the house and sell it, and said that her rights were removed by signing the charge. A guarantee procured by duress by the creditor<sup>1</sup> is liable to be set aside<sup>2</sup>.

Duress may take the form of physical coercion<sup>3</sup>, or of any other conduct or threat which the law regards as illegitimate<sup>4</sup> which coerces the will of the guarantor and so vitiates his consent to the guarantee<sup>5</sup>.

1045. Undue influence; in general.

A guarantee procured by undue influence on the part of the creditor<sup>1</sup> is liable to be set aside<sup>2</sup>. Such undue influence is either actual or presumed<sup>3</sup>.

In cases of actual undue influence, it is necessary for the claimant to prove affirmatively that the wrongdoer exerted undue influence on the complainant to enter into the transaction<sup>4</sup>. He must show that (1) the other party to the transaction (or someone who induced the transaction for his own benefit) had the capacity to influence the complainant; (2) the influence was exercised; (3) its exercise was undue; and (4) its exercise brought about the transaction<sup>5</sup>. The line between permissible forms of coercion and persuasion on the one hand and undue influence on the other is regulated by considerations of public policy<sup>6</sup>. Relief will not be granted where all that is shown is impecuniosity or inequality of bargaining power<sup>7</sup>. There must be something in the nature of the conduct complained of which is unfair and improper, whether it takes the form of coercion, overreaching or cheating, before equity will intervene<sup>8</sup>.

Presumed undue influence arises out of a relationship between two persons where one person has acquired over another a measure of influence, or ascendancy, of which the ascendant person then takes unfair advantage<sup>9</sup>. Whether a transaction was brought about by the exercise of what is commonly called 'presumed undue influence' is a question of fact and the burden of proving it rests upon the person who claims to have been wronged<sup>10</sup>. A different form of presumption, however, arises in the case of certain types of relationship in which one party acquires influence over another who is vulnerable and dependent and where, moreover, substantial gifts by the influenced or vulnerable person are not normally to be expected. In these cases the law presumes, irrebuttably, that one party had influence over the other. The complainant need not prove he actually reposed trust and confidence in the other party; it is sufficient for him to prove the existence of the type of relationship<sup>11</sup>. That presumption does not arise from the normal relationship of banker and customer<sup>12</sup>; nor does the relationship of husband and wife as such give rise to the presumption<sup>13</sup>.

Reluctance to enter into a contract of guarantee or collateral security is not necessarily indicative that any improper pressure was being brought to bear; indeed reluctance on the part of the surety may rather show that he knew what he was doing and did it because he thought it was the right thing to do<sup>14</sup>.

The presumption of undue influence may be rebutted by proof that the guarantee was given as a result of full, free and informed thought by the guarantor about it<sup>15</sup>. Proof that the complainant received advice from an independent<sup>16</sup> third party before entering into the impugned transaction may be very helpful in rebutting the presumption of undue influence. However such advice, including legal advice, is on the one hand not always necessary nor on the other hand always sufficient<sup>17</sup>. A bank cannot avoid being fixed with constructive notice of the complainant's equity merely by relying on an honest belief that the complainant was represented in the transaction by a solicitor, since it cannot be assumed that the solicitor's retainer extended to explaining to his client the nature and effect of the transaction<sup>18</sup>.

1 For the circumstances in which the creditor may be affected by undue influence exercised by a third party see PARA 1046.

2 See Lloyds Bank Ltd v Bundy [1975] QB 326, [1974] 3 All ER 757, CA; National Westminster Bank plc v Morgan [1985] AC 686, [1985] 1 All ER 821, HL; Woodstead Finance Ltd v Petrou [1986] BTLC 267; Midland Bank plc v Phillips (14 March 1986, unreported), CA. See also the cases cited in PARA 1046. 3 The wisdom of the practice of making a classification of cases of undue influence has been questioned (see Royal Bank of Scotland v Etridge (No 2) [2001] UKHL 44, [2002] 2 AC 773, [2001] 4 All ER 449 esp at [92] per Lord Clyde, at [107] per Lord Hobhouse and at [158], [161] per Lord Scott); however a distinction may still be drawn between actual undue influence and presumed undue influence. Cf however Royal Bank of Scotland v Etridge (No 2) at [92] per Lord Clyde ('on the face of it a division into cases of 'actual' and 'presumed' undue influence appears illogical'). The previous classification, in Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA v Aboody [1990] 1 QB 923, [1992] 4 All ER 955, CA and adopted by Lord Browne-Wilkinson in Barclays Bank plc v O'Brien [1994] 1 AC 180, [1993] 4 All ER 417, HL, was into: (1) Class 1, cases of actual undue influence; (2) Class 2A, cases of presumed undue influence where the law presumes the legal relationship between the parties to be one of trust and confidence; and (3) Class 2B where the claimant must establish by affirmative evidence that he or she was accustomed to repose trust and confidence in the alleged wrongdoer.

10 The evidence required to discharge the burden of proof depends on the nature of the alleged undue influence, the personalities of the parties, their relationship, the extent to which the transaction cannot readily be accounted for by the ordinary motives of ordinary persons in that relationship and all the circumstances of the case. Proof that the complainant placed trust and confidence in the other party in relation to the management of the complainant's financial affairs, coupled with a transaction which calls for explanation, will normally be sufficient, failing satisfactory evidence to the contrary, to discharge the burden of proof. The court may then infer that the transaction was procured by undue influence. This situation is conventionally described as one in which a presumption of undue influence arises, the use of the word 'presumption' being descriptive of a shift in the evidential onus on a question of fact: Royal Bank of Scotland v Etridge (No 2) [2001] UKHL 44, [2002] 2 AC 773, [2001] 4 All ER 449. The weight, or importance, to be attached to such advice depends on all the circumstances. Generally advice from a solicitor or other outside adviser can be expected to bring home to a complainant a proper understanding of what he or she is about to do; but a person may fully understand the implications of a proposed transaction and yet still be acting under the undue influence of another. The question is not whether the complainant knew what he was doing and intended to do, but how the intention to act was created. Whether it will be proper to infer that outside advice had an emancipating effect, so that the transaction was not brought about by the exercise of undue influence, is a question of fact to be decided having regard to all the evidence in the case: Steeple v Lea (1997) 76 P & CR 157, [1998] 2 FCR 144, CA; Crédit Lyonnais Bank Nederland NV v Burch [1997] 1 All ER 144, 74 P & CR 384, CA; Royal Bank of Scotland v Etridge (No 2) [2001]

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(ii) Essentials of a Guarantee/D. VITIATING FACTORS/1046. Misrepresentation or influence by third parties.

1046. Misrepresentation or influence by third parties.

Where the guarantor seeks to avoid the guarantee on the grounds of misrepresentation, duress or undue influence, it is not of itself sufficient for him to show that that misrepresentation, duress or undue influence was committed by the principal debtor or some other third party. He must show that the creditor is affected in law by the third party's wrongdoing<sup>1</sup>.

There are two distinct grounds on which the creditor may be affected by the actions of the principal debtor or a third party: they are (1) agency; and (2) notice<sup>2</sup>. On general principles, the creditor will be vicariously liable for the acts of his agents acting within the scope of their authority<sup>3</sup>. So if the wrongdoing principal debtor or other third party is acting as agent for the creditor in obtaining the guarantee, the guarantee so obtained may be set aside as against the creditor<sup>4</sup>. However, in the majority of cases where the creditor has required of the principal debtor that there must be a surety, the principal debtor will be acting on his own account and not for the creditor in seeking to procure the support of a guarantor<sup>5</sup>.

If the creditor has actual or constructive notice<sup>6</sup> at the time of execution of a guarantee that the guarantee has been procured by the exercise of undue influence, he cannot enforce the transaction<sup>7</sup>. What notice will be requisite will depend on the nature of the undue influence alleged. In a case of actual undue influence, the creditor must have notice of the circumstances alleged to constitute the actual exercise of the undue influence; in a presumption case he must have notice of the circumstances from which the presumption of undue influence is alleged to arise<sup>8</sup>.

Questions have typically arisen where a husband has borrowed money for his business from a bank secured by a mortgage on the jointly owned matrimonial home, and where, on the bank seeking to realise its security, the wife has claimed that she is not bound by her guarantee, having entered into the mortgage because of the undue influence of her husband. The principle<sup>9</sup> that has recently emerged is that in such circumstances the bank is 'put on inquiry'<sup>10</sup> and will be subject to the wife's claim unless it can establish that it has taken reasonable steps to bring home to her, as guarantor, in a meaningful way the practical implications of the proposed transaction and the risks she is running by standing as surety<sup>11</sup>. The duty to take these steps, it has been held, is not restricted to the husband/wife relationship but applies in all cases where the relationship between the surety and the debtor is non-commercial<sup>12</sup>. In these cases a bank is put on inquiry whenever a wife offers to stand surety for her husband's debts<sup>13</sup>. Where, however, the money is being advanced to husband and wife jointly, a bank is not put on inquiry unless it is aware that the loan is being made for the husband's purposes as distinct from the couple's joint purposes<sup>14</sup>.

A bank may satisfy the requirements set out above if it insists that the wife or other guarantor attend a private meeting with a representative of the bank at which she is told of the extent of her liabilities as surety, warned of the risks she is running and urged to take independent advice. Alternatively the bank may seek protection by seeing to it that the wife is advised independently by a solicitor. To this end the bank should communicate directly with the wife, informing her that for its own protection it will require written confirmation from a solicitor, acting for her, to the effect that the solicitor has fully explained to her the nature of the documents and the practical implications they will have for her. She should be told that the purpose of this requirement is that thereafter she should not be able to dispute she is legally bound by the documents once she has signed them. She should be asked to nominate a solicitor<sup>15</sup> whom she is willing to instruct to advise her separately from her husband and to act for her in giving the necessary confirmation to the bank. The bank should not proceed with the transaction until it has received an appropriate response directly from the wife<sup>16</sup>. The bank must supply the solicitor with all the necessary financial information after obtaining the husband's consent to the passing on of confidential information. Of course if consent is not forthcoming the transaction will not be able to proceed. If the solicitor cannot obtain from the bank all the information he needs, he should refuse to provide the confirmation sought by the bank. Having explained the position to the wife, setting out the risks involved, the solicitor should make it clear to the wife that she has a choice. The decision whether or not to proceed is hers and hers alone<sup>17</sup>. Exceptionally there may be a case where the bank believes or suspects that the wife has been misled by her husband or is not entering into the transaction of her own free will. In such a case the bank must inform the wife's solicitors of the facts giving rise to its belief or suspicion<sup>18</sup>.

In every case the bank should obtain from the wife's solicitor an appropriate written confirmation of the matters referred to above<sup>19</sup>.

There is no special equity that entitles a wife or other cohabitee to set aside a guarantee merely on the grounds that she did not fully understand the transaction<sup>20</sup>.

6 If the circumstances are such as fairly to lead a reasonable person to believe that fraud must have been used in order to obtain the guarantor's agreement to the transaction, the creditor is bound to make inquiry and cannot shelter himself under the plea that he was not called on to ask and did not ask any questions on the subject: Owen and Gutch v Homan (1853) 4 HL Cas 997 at 1034-1035 per Lord Cranworth LC.

E. CONSIDERATION

1047. Necessity for consideration.

Every guarantee not made by deed must, like other simple contracts, be supported by a valuable consideration<sup>1</sup>, that is to say, the mere existence of the debt, default or miscarriage of another person is not sufficient to support the guarantor's promise to the creditor<sup>2</sup>, which must in all cases be founded upon a new consideration<sup>3</sup>, the total failure of which entitles the guarantor to have his guarantee delivered up to be cancelled<sup>4</sup>.

These cases make it clear that when Lord Westbury in Williams v Bayley (1866) LR 1 HL 200 at 219 described a contract to give security for the debt of another as 'a contract without consideration', he meant that the consideration for such a contract is not necessarily a direct benefit or advantage to the guarantor. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(ii) Essentials of a Guarantee/E. CONSIDERATION/1048. Requisites of consideration.

1048. Requisites of consideration.

The consideration for the guarantor's promise does not move from the principal debtor, but from the creditor<sup>1</sup>. It need not directly benefit the guarantor<sup>2</sup>, although it may do so<sup>3</sup>, and it may consist wholly of some advantage given to or conferred on the principal debtor by the creditor at the guarantor's request<sup>4</sup>. Thus, the guarantor's promise often stipulates for a supply of goods<sup>5</sup> or an advance of money<sup>6</sup> to the principal debtor, or that the principal debtor should be taken into the creditor's service or employment<sup>7</sup>.

The authorities for the doctrine that the consideration for a promise must move from the promisee do not cover a case in which the consideration is supplied by an agent who, nevertheless, obtains the promise for and on behalf of his principal: see Fleming v Bank of New Zealand [1900] AC 577, PC.

1049. Forbearance as consideration.

The consideration may take the form of forbearance by the creditor, at the guarantor's request, to sue the principal debtor<sup>1</sup>, or of the actual suspension of pending legal proceedings against him<sup>2</sup>. The mere fact of forbearance is not, however, of itself a consideration for a person's becoming a guarantor for the payment of a debt<sup>3</sup>. There must be either an undertaking to forbear, or an actual forbearance at the guarantor's express or implied request<sup>4</sup>.

An agreement to forbear for a reasonable time will provide sufficient consideration to support a guarantor's promise<sup>5</sup>. So will an agreement to forbear for an indefinite period, at least when a reasonable time can be inferred or where the guarantor has received the advantage contemplated<sup>6</sup>. Whilst the mere fact of forbearance, as opposed to an express promise to do so, will not supply the necessary consideration, an act of forbearance following a request, at the time the guarantee was entered into, so to act will do so, even if the request was not expressly agreed<sup>7</sup>. To be effectual the forbearance relied upon must be of a right capable of being enforced<sup>8</sup>. Therefore, where there is no person who could be sued for the debt the forbearance to sue cannot form any consideration<sup>9</sup>.

The decision in Ross v Moss (1597) Cro Eliz 560, Ex Ch, that the mere discontinuance of an action is not a sufficient consideration to support a promise was disapproved in Harris v Venables (1872) LR 7 Exch 235, where it was held that the withdrawal of a petition presented for winding up a company was a sufficient consideration to support a promise to pay the costs incurred of and in relation to such petition.

Where a surety who was liable on a promissory note jointly with the principal debtor, on being informed that proceedings were contemplated against himself and the principal debtor for the debt, stated, by letter, his intention to pay the debt, it was held (reversing the decision of Sir John Romilly MR in Jones v Beach (1851) 21 LJCh 543) that there was no consideration for this promise, and, consequently, on the surety's predeceasing the principal, the surety's estate was not liable as for a several debt: Jones v Beach (1852) 2 De GM & G 886. In proceedings founded on the collateral consideration of forbearance to sue another there never was any need to show, in the pleadings, the origin or cause of the debt guaranteed: see Therne v Fuller (1616) Cro Jac 396.

1050. Non-essentials.

The consideration for the guarantor's promise need not be commensurate with the promise, for its mere inadequacy will not invalidate the guarantee<sup>1</sup>. Neither need it be contemporaneous with it<sup>2</sup>, as it may consist of a compliance with some stipulated condition which the creditor, without being bound to observe, must fulfil before the guarantee will attach<sup>3</sup>. It may be entire (that is, given once and for all), or fragmentary (that is, supplied from time to time) and therefore divisible<sup>4</sup>.

The consideration for a promise of guarantee need not appear in writing<sup>5</sup>.

1051. Insufficient consideration.

An illegal consideration will not support a guarantee<sup>1</sup>.

A transaction of guarantee may be invalid where the consideration is the enabling of a preference to be given to one creditor over the general body of creditors of a bankrupt or insolvent<sup>2</sup>.

Neither a mere moral<sup>3</sup> nor a past consideration<sup>4</sup> will support a guarantee. Where, however, the language of the guarantee is equally expressive of a past or concurrent or future consideration<sup>5</sup> for the guarantor's promise, the maxim ut res magis valeat quam pereat<sup>6</sup> applies<sup>7</sup>, and oral evidence will, if necessary, be admitted to clear up the ambiguity<sup>8</sup>.

A mere promise to entertain a request by the guarantor or principal debtor to enter into transactions with the principal debtor does not amount to sufficient consideration to support a guarantee<sup>9</sup>. However, the actual advance of money following such a request does provide sufficient consideration to make the guarantor liable<sup>10</sup>.

The mere existence of an antecedent debt is not of itself valuable consideration for a security given by the debtor<sup>11</sup>, although such a debt is a sufficient consideration for a cheque or other negotiable security given on account of the debt. In such a case the negotiable security is equivalent to payment of the debt<sup>12</sup>. In the case of a promissory note given by a principal and a guarantor for a definite sum, payable on a fixed day, it is presumed to be given in consideration of an advance at the date of the note, and, if the creditor insists, as against the guarantor, that the object of the note was to secure the payment of the balance of an account current between the principal and the creditor, the burden of proof lies on the creditor<sup>13</sup>.

1 See Wood v Barker (1865) LR 1 Eq 139; Coles v Strick (1850) 15 QB 2. If the guaranteed debt is itself illegal, it cannot be recovered from the guarantor under his guarantee: see Lougher v Molyneux [1916] 1 KB 718; see also Swan v Bank of Scotland (1836) 10 Bli NS 627, HL, where, however, the basis of the decision was that the loan was not only illegal, but void by statute; and cf Coutts & Co v Browne-Lecky [1947] KB 104 at 109, [1946] 2 All ER 207 at 209; Heald v O'Connor [1971] 2 All ER 1105, [1971] 1 WLR 497. The stifling of a prosecution for a crime is an illegal consideration: Jones v Merionethshire Permanent Benefit Building Society [1891] 2 Ch 587; affd [1892] 1 Ch 173, CA; and see Cannon v Rands (1870) 23 LT 817; Seear v Cohen (1881) 45 LT 589, DC. It has, however, been held in Ireland that an agreement to abstain from instituting such a threatened prosecution is not an illegal consideration unless there are reasonable grounds for believing that the illegal offence was actually committed, or unless each party entered into the agreement on that assumption: Rourke v Mealy (1878) 4 LR Ir 166. A guarantee of an overdraft to enable the principal debtor to pay bets which he had lost is not illegal, and is therefore enforceable: Re O'Shea, ex p Lancaster [1911] 2 KB 981, CA. The mere fact that a guarantee is signed on a Sunday does not make it illegal: Norton v Powell (1842) 4 Man & G 42. Where loans were made as part of a conspiracy to defraud the creditors of a company, and the company was a victim of that conspiracy and not a party to it, the company's liquidators were not debarred from recovering those loans or enforcing the guarantees given in respect of them: BCCI (Overseas) Ltd v Gokal [1999] All ER (D) 1494. As to the effect of illegality on contracts see generally CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 869 et seq. As to the effect of international sanctions on the right to payment under a counter-guarantee see Shanning International Ltd (in liquidation) v Lloyds TSB Bank plc [1999] All ER (D) 1457.

2 It has been held that a guarantee which amounted to a fraudulent preference could not be enforced, and would be ordered to be delivered up to be cancelled, even to a party to the fraud: see Jackman v Mitchell (1807) 13 Ves 581. Similarly, a guarantee given to one of several creditors, without the knowledge of the rest, to induce him to sign a composition deed has been held to be a fraud on the rest of the creditors and void: Coleman v Waller (1829) 3 Y & J 212; McKewan v Sanderson (1875) LR 20 Eq 65. The concept of fraudulent preference in insolvency has been replaced by the wider statutory concept of voidable preference: see the Insolvency Act 1986 ss 239, 340; BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARA 653 et seq; and COMPANY AND PARTNERSHIP INSOLVENCY.

See also Leask v Scott Bros (1877) 2 QBD 376, CA (transfer of a bill of lading to a transferee in good faith defeats the right of stoppage in transit even though the consideration for the transfer is an antecedent debt); Fullerton v Provincial Bank of Ireland [1903] AC 309 at 313-316, HL.

12 Currie v Misa (1875) LR 10 Exch 153; affd on another ground sub nom Misa v Currie (1876) 1 App Cas 554, HL, where it was laid down that all money paid into a bank is subject to a lien, and that all documents as well as money deposited with a bank are subject on the bank's part to a lien in respect of any balance that may be due to it from its customer: Misa v Currie at 569 per Lord Hatherley. In this case, which was not cited in Wigan v English and Scottish Law Life Assurance Association [1909] 1 Ch 291, it was not really necessary to decide whether an existing debt constitutes a sufficient consideration for the giving of the security, as there was ample consideration between the holders of the security (a cheque) sued upon and its drawer. An antecedent debt or liability of the drawer (but not of a third party) is of itself sufficient consideration to support a bill of exchange: see the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 s 27(1)(b); and PARA 1479.

A. NECESSITY FOR WRITING

1052. The Statute of Frauds.

This enactment is merely an enactment as to evidence<sup>9</sup>. Where the original written evidence of a guarantee is lost, oral evidence of its having existed is admissible<sup>10</sup>. Moreover, a payment of money into court by a defendant to a claim on a guarantee dispenses with the production of written evidence of the contract<sup>11</sup> and admits the existence of an enforceable contract<sup>12</sup>, unless the Statute of Frauds is at the same time pleaded<sup>13</sup>. A plea of tender also dispenses with written proof of a guarantee<sup>14</sup>.

1 The common law of England did not require any written evidence of a guarantee, which could, accordingly, originally be proved in the same manner as any other contract: Steele v M'Kinlay (1880) 5 App Cas 754 at 768, HL, per Lord Blackburn. To prevent, however, the danger of a guarantee being established by false evidence, or by evidence of loose talk, when it never was really meant to make such a contract, the English legislature intervened: Steele v M'Kinlay. Much of the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4 was repealed by the Law of Property Act 1925 s 207, Sch 7 and by the Statute Law Revision Acts 1883 and 1948 and the Law Reform (Enforcement of Contracts) Act 1954 s 1, and the section is now in force only in respect of the matters mentioned in this paragraph.

2 In fact the statutory wording is 'action': but see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 18.

3 'Special promise' excludes implied promises arising by operation of law (Gray v Hill (1826) Ry & M 420), contracts made by deed or of record (Holmes v Mitchell (1859) 7 CBNS 361 at 368-369 per Willes J), and also liabilities for deceitful representation by which credit has been obtained for a third party (to remedy this the Statute of Frauds Amendment Act 1828 s 6 was passed (see PARA 1054); Pasley v Freeman (1789) 3 Term Rep 51; notes to Chandelor v Lopus (1603) Cro Jac 4 in 2 Smith LC (13th Edn) 57). Whether a 'special promise' is or is not within the enactment depends not on the consideration for the promise but on other matters (Fitzgerald v Dressler (1859) 7 CBNS 374 at 392 per Cockburn CJ; Sutton & Co v Grey [1894] 1 QB 285 at 289, CA, per Lord Esher MR; Harburg India Rubber Comb Co v Martin [1902] 1 KB 778 at 788, CA; Davys v Buswell [1913] 2 KB 47, CA; Huggard v Representative Church Body [1916] 1 IR 1; notes to Forth v Stanton (1669) 1 Saund 210 at 211e, note (1)), although a different view on this subject has been expressed: see Saunders v Wakefield (1821) 4 B & Ald 595 at 600-601. A special promise is sometimes partly within the enactment and partly outside it. When this occurs, and the promise is not reduced to writing, if the parts are separable, the part outside the enactment may give rise to a claim (see Wood v Benson (1831) 2 Cr & J 94; and Bromley v Smith [1909] 2 KB 235); while if the parts are inseparable no action will lie in respect of either part (see Chater v Beckett (1797) 7 Term Rep 201; Lord Lexington v Clarke (1689) 2 Vent 223; Thomas v Williams (1830) 10 B & C 664; Earl of Falmouth v Thomas (1832) 1 Cr & M 89; Wood v Benson; Head v Baldrey (1837) 6 Ad & El 459; and Savage v Canning (1867) 16 WR 133).

4 'Translated into modern legal terminology 'to answer for' is 'to accept liability for': Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] AC 331 at 347, [1972] 2 All ER 393 at 400-401, HL, per Lord Diplock.

5 'Translated into modern legal terminology . . . 'debt, default or miscarriage' is descriptive of failure to perform legal obligations, existing or future, arising from any source, not only from contractual promises, but in any other factual situations capable of giving rise to legal obligations such as those resulting from bailment, tort or unsatisfied judgments': Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] AC 331 at 347-348, [1972] 2 All ER 393 at 401, HL, per Lord Diplock.

The plural of 'miscarriage' is used in the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4 (see note 1). Each word in the phrase 'debt, default or miscarriages' has a different signification: Kirkham v Marter (1819) 2 B & Ald 613 at 616 per Abbott CJ. Thus:

- 1 (1) 'debt' refers to a contractual liability already incurred (Castling v Aubert (1802) 2 East 325 at 330-331 per Lord Ellenborough CJ);
- 2 (2) 'default' refers to a future contractual liability (Re Young and Harston's Contract (1885) 31 ChD 168, CA; and see Mountstephen v Lakeman (1871) LR 7 QB 196 at 202, Ex Ch, per Willes J), and possibly to any future liability, whether or not founded in contract (Kirkham v Marter above at 617 per Holroyd J). Apart from its statutory significance, 'default' is a purely relative term, just like 'negligence', meaning nothing more and nothing less than not doing what is reasonable under the circumstances; not doing something which one ought to do, having regard to the relations which the person defaulting occupies towards other persons interested in a particular transaction (Re Young and Harston's Contract above at 174 per Bowen LJ);

- 3 (3) 'miscarriages' comprehends that species of wrongful act for the consequences of which the law would make a person civilly responsible (Kirkham v Marter at 616 per Abbot CJ), although probably it and 'default' equally apply to a promise to answer for another, with respect to the non-performance of a duty, even where the duty is not founded in contract (Kirkham v Marter above at 617 per Holroyd J).

6 'Of another person' means that, to make the enactment apply, there must always be a principal debtor in existence, or in contemplation, for whom the surety is, or is to become, answerable to the creditor: Lakeman v Mountstephen (1874) LR 7 HL 17 at 24-25, per Lord Selborne LC. As to this see PARA 1058 et seq.

For the principles determining what is a guarantee within this enactment see PARA 1058 et seq; and for what written evidence of guarantee will satisfy the enactment see PARA 1064 et seq. There is no reason in principle for distinguishing, in this context, between contracts for the sale of land and contracts of guarantee: see GMAC Commercial Credit Development Ltd v Sandhu [2004] EWHC 716 (Comm), [2004] All ER (D) 589 (Mar). It appears that an email guarantee may satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4 so long as it has been 'signed' by the guarantor. However, the standard reproduction of the intending guarantor's email address is not referable to the intention to provide a guarantee and is thus of itself not a sufficient signature for the purposes of s 4: see J Pereira Fernandes SA v Mehta [2006] EWHC 813 (Ch), [2006] 2 All ER 891.

1053. Effect of oral guarantee.

Although an oral guarantee cannot be enforced by bringing a claim, it is not, on that account, void<sup>1</sup>. Thus, money actually paid under it cannot, it seems, be recovered<sup>2</sup>, and the existence of such a guarantee may be used as a defence<sup>3</sup>. When given by a solicitor an oral guarantee may be enforced against him by the court, by virtue of its summary jurisdiction over its officers<sup>4</sup>. On the other hand, an executor or administrator cannot retain a debt owing in respect of an oral guarantee<sup>5</sup>, and, should he pay such a debt, would commit a devastavit<sup>6</sup>. An oral guarantee made abroad, and binding there, cannot be enforced in England and Wales by bringing a claim, since the mode of proof is governed by the lex fori<sup>7</sup>.

Although the creditor may have relied on an oral or unsigned guarantee, the guarantee is not thereby estopped from pleading the absence of a signed memorandum for the purposes of the Statute of Frauds (1667)<sup>8</sup>.

8 Such pleading would be for the purposes of the Statute of Frauds Act (1677) s 4: see PARA 1052. ### 1054. The Statute of Frauds Amendment Act 1828.

By the Statute of Frauds Amendment Act 1828, commonly known as Lord Tenterden's Act<sup>1</sup>, no claim<sup>2</sup> may be brought by which to charge any person upon or by reason of any representation<sup>3</sup> or assurance made or given concerning or relating to the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade or dealings of any other person<sup>4</sup> in order that that other person may obtain credit, money or goods, unless the representation or assurance is made in writing<sup>5</sup>.

Only statements which relate in some way to the credit or creditworthiness of another person fall within the relevant provision of the Statute of Frauds Amendment Act 1828<sup>6</sup>. Moreover, that provision only applies to fraudulent misrepresentations<sup>7</sup>. It does not constitute a defence to claims based upon negligence<sup>8</sup>. The enactment only applies to claims upon representations as such, and not to claims in which the gist of the claim is a breach of duty<sup>9</sup>.

The representation relied upon must be signed by the party to be charged with it<sup>10</sup>. Where the party to be charged is an individual or a partnership, an agent's signature has been held insufficient<sup>11</sup>. However, the signature on behalf of a company of its duly authorised agent acting within the scope of his authority is the signature of the company for these purposes<sup>12</sup>. A partner signing in the firm name binds himself<sup>13</sup>. Where there are both written and oral representations a claim lies if the written representation materially induced the person to whom it was given to give credit<sup>14</sup>.

1 See Lyde v Barnard (1836) 1 M & W 101 at 114 per Parke B. The Statute of Frauds Amendment Act 1828 was passed owing to a successful evasion of the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4 (see PARA 1052), which took the form of treating the guarantor's oral promise to be answerable for another as a false representation, for which he was made liable in tort although not in contract: see Lyde v Barnard; Tatton v Wade (1856) 18 CB 371 at 381, Ex Ch, per Pollock CB; Pasley v Freeman (1789) 3 Term Rep 51; Ex p Carr (1814) 3 Ves & B 108 at 110 per Lord Eldon LC; Banbury v Bank of Montreal [1918] AC 626 at 639-640, 693-694, 711-712, HL.

2 The statutory wording is in fact 'action': but see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 18.

4 'Person' includes a corporation: Banbury v Bank of Montreal [1918] AC 626 at 708, HL, per Lord Parker, and at 714 per Lord Wrenbury. Cf the Interpretation Act 1978, which by s 5, Sch 1 defines 'person' as including a body of persons corporate or unincorporate. This definition, however, only applies to Acts passed after 1889: s 22(1), Sch 2 para 4(1)(a). A fraudulent misrepresentation by one partner as to the credit of his firm is one as to the credit 'of another person' within the enactment: Devaux v Steinkeller (1839) 6 Bing NC 84.

By the Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856, no special promise to be made by any person to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another person, if in writing and signed by the party to be charged with it or some other person duly authorised by him, is deemed invalid to support a claim<sup>1</sup>, suit or other proceeding to charge the person making the promise, by reason only that the consideration for the promise does not appear in writing or by necessary inference from a written document<sup>2</sup>.

1 The statutory wording is in fact 'action': but see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 18.

2 Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856 s 3 (amended by the Statute Law Revision Act 1892). See further PARA 1072. This enactment, which does not dispense with the necessity for a consideration (see PARAS 1047, 1072), was rendered necessary by reason of its having been decided that, as the language of the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4 (see PARA 1052) required 'the agreement' to be in writing, this must be taken to comprise both the promise and also the consideration for it (Wain v Warlters (1804) 5 East 10; 1 Smith LC (13th Edn) 358; Saunders v Wakefield (1821) 4 B & Ald 595), which together constitute an agreement not made by deed (see Herman v Jeuchner (1885) 15 QBD 561 at 563, CA, per Sir Baliol Brett MR). This construction, however, imposed a grievance on the mercantile community (see the notes to Forth v Stanton (1669) 1 Wms Saund (1871 Edn) 226 at 227; and the notes to Birkmyr v Darnell (1704) 1 Salk 27 in 1 Smith LC (13th Edn) 331 at 336), and was found, in practice, to lead to many unjust and merely technical defences to actions on guarantees.

1 See the Law of Property (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1989 s 1, which inter alia abolishes the requirement of a seal for the valid execution of an instrument as a deed by an individual and applies to instruments delivered as deeds after 31 July 1990: ss 1(11), 5(1), (2); Law of Property (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1989 (Commencement) Order 1990, SI 1990/1175. Requisites for application of the Statute of Frauds.

B. CONTRACTS WITHIN OR OUTSIDE THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS

1058. Requisites for application of the Statute of Frauds.

To bring a case within the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup>, the primary liability of another person to the promisee for the debt, default or miscarriage to which the promise of guarantee relates must exist or be contemplated<sup>2</sup>, otherwise the statute does not apply, and the promise is then valid and can be sued on, even if it is not evidenced in writing. Accordingly it has been suggested that a promise to pay the rent in arrear to a landlord who has levied a distress, in consideration of his abandoning the distress, is not within the statute<sup>3</sup> on the ground that so long as he holds the goods under distress his remedy for the recovery of the rent by bringing a claim is suspended<sup>4</sup>.

The mere existence of a third person's liability is usually sufficient of itself to bring a guarantor's promise within the Statute of Frauds<sup>5</sup>, except where the promise to be answerable for that liability is not the immediate object of the contract, but is a mere incident of it<sup>6</sup>.

In order to bring a case within the statute it is not necessary that the principal debtor's liability should precede the surety's promise to be answerable<sup>7</sup>. Where it does not do so, however, it is generally more difficult to decide to whom credit is given, a question which then becomes one to be determined by evidence<sup>8</sup>.

Even where the promise has reference to an existing liability of a third party, the statute does not apply if the consideration for the promise is the release or doing of something which has the effect of releasing the third party from liability<sup>9</sup>, as where the transaction between the parties amounts to a novation of a debt<sup>10</sup>, the release of the original debt being, as it usually is in such a case<sup>11</sup>, the consideration for the contract; or where there is a novation of a contract<sup>12</sup>.

1 See the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4; and PARA 1052.

2 This is the primary and main principle for testing whether the statute applies to a particular case: see generally Birkmyr v Darnell (1704) 1 Salk 27; 1 Smith LC (13th Edn) 331; Eastwood v Kenyon (1840) 11 Ad & El 438 at 446 per Denman CJ; Hargreaves v Parsons (1844) 13 M & W 561 at 570 per Parke B; Lakeman v Mountstephen (1874) LR 7 HL 17 at 24-25; Tomlinson v Gill (1756) Amb 330; Kirkham v Marter (1819) 2 B & Ald 613; Lord Lexington v Clarke (1689) 2 Vent 223; Dixon v Hatfield (1825) 2 Bing 439; Bird v Gammon (1837) 3 Bing NC 883; Batson v King (1859) 4 H & N 739; Reader v Kingham (1862) 13 CBNS 344; Cripps v Hartnoll (1863) 4 B & S 414, Ex Ch; Mallet v Bateman (1865) LR 1 CP 163, Ex Ch; Wildes v Dudlow (1874) LR 19 Eq 198; Harburg India Rubber Comb Co v Martin [1902] 1 KB 778, CA; Davys v Buswell [1913] 2 KB 47, CA. For the four other principles for testing whether a promise is within the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4, and not actionable unless evidenced in writing, see PARAS 1060-1063.

3 Edwards v Kelly (1817) 6 M & S 204. See also Williams v Leper (1766) 3 Burr 1886, where the landlord had entered to levy the distress, but had not actually distrained; but it appears to have been held that the landlord was nonetheless in possession of the goods, as if he had actually distrained. These cases, however, can be supported on the broader ground that the object of the promisor was to relieve the goods of an incumbrance so as to enable him to deal with them. See further Bampton v Paulin (1827) 4 Bing 264; and PARA 1062. This is probably the correct ground, for otherwise a promise made by a person who has no interest in the goods, merely for the purpose of causing them to be restored to the owner, would not be within the statute, a proposition contrary to decided cases: see Rounce v Woodyard (1846) 8 LTOS 186; Bull v Collier (1842) 4 ILR 107; Fennell v Mulcahy (1845) 8 ILR 434, which elaborately reviews the cases.

4 Edwards v Kelly (1817) 6 M & S 204 at 209 per Bailey and Holroyd JJ; Lehain v Philpott (1875) LR 10 Exch 242 at 246-247. The statute does, however, comprise a promise to pay rent to become due, in consideration of the distress being abandoned, and if the promise is to pay both rent in arrear and to become due, and is not severable (Wood v Benson (1831) 2 Cr & J 94), it cannot be enforced at all if not evidenced in writing (Thomas v Williams (1830) 10 B & C 664; and see Lord Lexington v Clarke (1689) 2 Vent 223).

Where, however, a person certifies that another person is able to pay for goods, to be supplied to that other person's order, he does not incur any liability for that other person's default: Block v Cox (1860) 2 LT 517, Ex Ch. Nor does a solicitor incur liability for his client by writing to the client's creditor that he (the solicitor) is making arrangements for a loan to his client, and that if the creditor will hold a bill for a few days, he (the solicitor) will be prepared on the client's behalf to take it up: Allaway v Duncan (1867) 16 LT 264; and see Downman v Williams (1845) 7 QB 103, Ex Ch; Lewis v Nicholson (1852) 18 QB 503; Jones v Beach (1852) 2 De GM & G 886; Dixon v Broomfield (1814) 2 Chit 205. It seems, however, that one who covenants for the act of another is personally bound by his covenant, even though he describes himself in the deed as covenanting for and on the part and behalf of that other person: Appleton v Binks (1804) 5 East 148; Re Bentley, ex p Bentley (1833) 2 Deac & Ch 578. ### 1058 Requisites for application of the Statute of Frauds

NOTE 5--Pitts, cited, reported at [2008] 1 All ER 941.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/B. CONTRACTS WITHIN OR OUTSIDE THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS/1059. Original promises outside the Statute of Frauds.

1059. Original promises outside the Statute of Frauds.

Original, as distinguished from collateral, conditional or accessory, promises are outside the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup>, because they bind the promisor to do something independently of and without regard to another's liability<sup>2</sup>.

The following are examples of promises which have been held to be original promises: a promise to pay a certain sum in consideration of the withdrawal of a disputed claim against a third party<sup>3</sup>, which must be distinguished from a promise to be answerable for the admitted liability of another in consideration of the creditor forbearing to sue, a promise which is within the statute<sup>4</sup>; a promise to pay another person's debt out of a fund or proceeds of sale of goods belonging to that other person<sup>5</sup>, or out of the debtor's own money, when it has been received by the promisor<sup>6</sup>; a promise to pay such debt should the promisor have money in his hands due to the debtor, on a proper assignment and a proper discharge from the debtor<sup>7</sup>; a promise that if the promisee will accept certain bills for a firm the promisor will take care that they will be met at maturity, and will provide the promisee with funds for the purpose<sup>8</sup>; a promise to pay, in certain events, a sum of money to another if that other will procure a loan for the promisor, and guarantee the lender the repayment of it<sup>9</sup>; a promise to a county court enforcement officer about to arrest a debtor under a warrant for non-payment of a judgment debt, to pay the amount of the judgment debt if he will refrain from executing the warrant<sup>10</sup>; a promise that another person will not leave the kingdom without paying his debt<sup>11</sup>; and a promise to procure the signature of another to a guarantee<sup>12</sup>.

A promise, however, to pay another's debt out of money due to the promisor himself when received by the promisor<sup>13</sup>, or a promise to give a guarantee<sup>14</sup>, or a promise to give bills for a debt due to a company<sup>15</sup> is collateral and accessory, and within the statute.

Although all guarantees are contracts of indemnity in the widest sense of the term 'indemnity'<sup>16</sup>, an indemnity, in a stricter sense of the word, is a contract in the nature of an original obligation<sup>17</sup>, and, therefore, outside the statute. Examples of promises outside the statute are a promise that, if another will, at the promisor's request, put his name to a bill of exchange, the promisor will see him harmless<sup>18</sup>; a promise to indemnify another from the consequences of entering into a surety bond<sup>19</sup>; a promise to hold a co-surety indemnified from all loss arising from the suretyship<sup>20</sup>; a promise to indemnify a third person against the cost of litigation undertaken at the promisor's request<sup>21</sup>; and a promise to be jointly liable with another<sup>22</sup>. In such cases there is really no principal debtor; there are only joint debtors, equally liable<sup>23</sup>.

1 Thus if two come to a shop, and one buys, and the other to gain him credit promises the seller that, if the buyer does not pay him, the promisor will do so, this is a collateral undertaking, and not actionable without writing; but on the other hand, if the buyer's friend says to the seller, 'Let him have the goods, and I will see you paid', this is an original undertaking for the promisor himself and outside the statute: Birkmyr v Darnell (1704) 1 Salk 27.

2 Gordon v Martin (1731) Fitz-G 302 at 303 per Lee J; Watkins v Perkins (1697) 1 Ld Raym 224; Jarmain v Algar (1826) 2 C & P 249; Barrell v Trussell (1811) 4 Taunt 117; Read v Nash (1751) 1 Wils 305; Bird v Gammon (1837) 3 Bing NC 883; Pearce v Blagrove (1855) 3 CLR 338. In Tomlinson v Gill (1756) Amb 330, Lord Hardwicke LC distinguished between a promise to pay the original debt on the footing of the original contract and where the promise is founded on a new consideration. This distinction no longer prevails. Moreover, whether the statute applies or not depends not on the consideration for the promise, but on other matters: see PARA 1058.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/B. CONTRACTS WITHIN OR OUTSIDE THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS/1060. Promise must be made to creditor.

1060. Promise must be made to creditor.

The Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup> does not apply to any promise to be answerable for another, unless the promise is made to the creditor, that is to say to the person to whom another is already or is thereafter to become liable, and who can enforce such liability by bringing a claim<sup>2</sup>.

The statute does not, therefore, apply to a promise made to the principal debtor himself<sup>3</sup>, by one co-debtor to another<sup>4</sup>, nor to a promise that a contract will be performed by a third person, made to a stranger to that contract<sup>5</sup>, nor to a promise to indemnify a person becoming bail for another's appearance to a criminal charge<sup>6</sup>, nor, it seems, to a promise to a firm, of which the promisor is himself a member, to be answerable for another to that firm<sup>7</sup>.

1 See the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4; and PARA 1052.

2 Ever since Eastwood v Kenyon (1840) 11 Ad & El 438 the rule of law has been as stated in the text; and see Harburg India Rubber Comb Co v Martin [1902] 1 KB 778 at 784, CA, per Vaughan Williams LJ.

3 Eastwood v Kenyon (1840) 11 Ad & El 438; and see Wildes v Dudlow (1874) LR 19 Eq 198; Castling v Aubert (1802) 2 East 325; Gregory v Williams (1817) 3 Mer 582.

5 Hargreaves v Parsons (1844) 13 M & W 561 at 570. So, a promise to a county court bailiff for payment of a judgment debt due to the judgment creditor in consideration of the bailiff's forbearing to execute a warrant of commitment against the debtor is outside the statute: Reader v Kingham (1862) 13 CBNS 344. See also Love's Case (1706) 1 Salk 28, where, however, the decision was that a promise by a third party to the sheriff who had levied under a writ of fieri facias to pay the debt if the sheriff would restore the goods, was a promise made for a legal consideration.

6 Cripps v Hartnoll (1863) 4 B & S 414, Ex Ch. As to the illegality of such a promise see, however, PARA 1269.

7 Re Hoyle, Hoyle v Hoyle [1893] 1 Ch 84 at 99, CA. It would seem that the Law of Property Act 1925 s 82 (see PARA 1016 note 2; and DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS vol 13 (2007 Reissue) PARA 264) does not affect this decision.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/B. CONTRACTS WITHIN OR OUTSIDE THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS/1061. Liability must result from guarantor's promise only.

1061. Liability must result from guarantor's promise only.

The Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup> does not apply to any case unless the guarantor's liability arises only from his express promise and not otherwise<sup>2</sup>.

Where the guarantee does not stand alone but is part of a larger transaction, even an oral guarantee may be enforceable<sup>3</sup>. A promise need not be in writing, even though it involves an obligation to discharge the debt of another, if the assumption of that obligation is only incidental to the transaction<sup>4</sup>. Where the payment of a debt or the fulfilment of a duty by another is a mere indirect incident<sup>5</sup>, or ulterior consequence<sup>6</sup>, of the terms in which the contract is framed, the transaction is outside the statute.

1 See the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4; and PARA 1052.

2 See the statement in the notes to Forth v Stanton (1669) 1 Saund 210 at 211e, note (I), adopted as correct by Cockburn CJ in Fitzgerald v Dressler (1859) 7 CBNS 374; and by the court in Harburg India Rubber Comb Co v Martin [1902] 1 KB 778, CA, where the rule is stated in a different form at 786 per Vaughan Williams LJ; and in Davys v Buswell [1913] 2 KB 47 at 53-55, CA. See also Bank of Scotland v Wright [1991] BCLC 244 at 264, where the passage in the text, as contained in an earlier edition of this title, is discussed by Brooke J. As to the approach of the court when determining whether a guarantor's liability arises only from his express promise see Actionstrength Ltd (t/a Vital Resources) v International Glass Engineering IN.GL.EN SpA [2001] EWCA Civ 1477, [2002] 4 All ER 468, [2002] 1 WLR 566; affd [2003] UKHL 17, [2003] 2 AC 541, [2003] 2 All ER 615.

4 See Orrell v Coppock (1856) 2 Jur NS 1244, where the promise was to pay a sum to compromise a claim against third parties, to which claim the promisor also was alleged to be liable, although he could have successfully resisted it; Macrory v Scott (1850) 5 Exch 907, where judgment had been recovered against the promisor as guarantor and he subsequently agreed that the judgment should be held by the creditor as security for the debt of another, notwithstanding that at the time of the agreement facts had occurred which had put an end to the promisor's liability under the judgment, although the judgment itself was still technically subsisting; Masters v Marriot (1693) 3 Lev 363, where the promise to be answerable for payment of money by the promisor's own agent was treated as being merely expressive of an already existing liability on the part of the promisor himself; Arden v Rowney (1805) 5 Esp 254, where the promisor merely agreed to be answerable for a definite sum due from another, to the extent only of the promisor's actual indebtedness to any such person; Hodgson v Anderson (1825) 5 Dow & Ry KB 735, where the promisors orally agreed to apply money, for which they were already accountable to their principal, in discharge of the principal's liability to his own creditor, to whom the promise was made; and Stephens v Squire (1696) 5 Mod Rep 205, where the promise was made by one of several defendants to pay a certain sum and costs if the action were abandoned against all the defendants. Perhaps also Houlditch v Milne (1800) 3 Esp 86 is to be explained on the ground that there the promisor himself was already liable for repairs to a third person's goods, independently of his express promise to be answerable for the same, in consideration of which the promisee abandoned his lien on the goods.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/B. CONTRACTS WITHIN OR OUTSIDE THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS/1062. Promisor interested in incumbered property.

1062. Promisor interested in incumbered property.

Where the person making the promise has personally, or through an agent, an interest in property which is subject to some incumbrance, such as a lien or the right of a creditor to distrain, and obtains a discharge of that incumbrance by promising the creditor to be responsible for the payment of the debt in respect of which it exists, the promise is not within the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup>.

The interest, however, must be a species of interest known to the law<sup>2</sup>, the object of the promise must be to liberate the property for the benefit of the promisor, and not merely for the benefit of the debtor, and the property must be surrendered to the promisor<sup>3</sup>, and if and in so far as the promise is to pay a debt in respect of which the property is not incumbered, the promise must be in writing<sup>4</sup>.

The Statute of Frauds applies with all its rigour to cases where the guarantor executes a guarantee for the liabilities of a third party where there is no pre-existing liability binding his property which he is seeking to release, whether or not he also charges his property with the performance of those liabilities as part of the same or some later series of transactions<sup>5</sup>.

1 See Williams v Leper (1766) 3 Burr 1886, where the promisor was an auctioneer employed by the holders of a bill of sale to sell the goods, and promised the landlord, who had entered for the purpose of distraining, that if he would refrain from exercising his right he would pay the rent in arrear. In the report of the case in 2 Wils 308 it is stated that the defendant was actually the holder of the bill of sale, but this does not affect the principle, for an auctioneer has a special property in the goods: see generally AUCTION. To the like effect are Edwards v Kelly (1817) 6 M & S 204; and Bampton v Paulin (1827) 4 Bing 264. See also Walker v Taylor (1834) 6 C & P 752, where the promise was made in consideration of the promisee's abandoning his lien on certain beer licences in which the promisor had a direct interest; Castling v Aubert (1802) 2 East 325, where it was agreed that if the promisee would surrender his lien on certain insurance policies in respect of acceptances which he had given for a third person, the promisor, who required possession of the policies in order to collect the amounts due under them on behalf of that third person, would provide for the acceptances at maturity; Fitzgerald v Dressler (1859) 7 CBNS 374, where the unpaid seller abandoned his lien and delivered the goods to a sub-purchaser on the sub-purchaser's undertaking to pay the purchase price due from the original purchaser. Contrast Gull v Lindsay (1849) 4 Exch 45, where a promise to satisfy a mere claim against a third person given in order to prevent the promisee asserting a lien based upon it was held to be within the statute.

2 Harburg India Rubber Comb Co v Martin [1902] 1 KB 778, CA; and see Davys v Buswell [1913] 2 KB 47, CA.

3 Clancy v Piggott (1835) 2 Ad & El 473; Rounce v Woodyard (1846) 8 LTOS 186; Bull v Collier (1842) 4 ILR 107; Fennell v Mulcahy (1845) 8 ILR 434. If Houlditch v Milne (1800) 3 Esp 86 decides anything to the contrary, it cannot be regarded as law. See also Harburg India Rubber Comb Co v Martin [1902] 1 KB 778, CA. The case of Barrell v Trussell (1811) 4 Taunt 117 seems to have been decided on the ground that it did not appear that there was any promise to pay the debt of another at all. A distinction must be drawn between the cases where the promise was made to the creditor and those where it was made to somebody else, as in Reader v Kingham (1862) 13 CBNS 344, where the promise is not within the statute because it is not made to the creditor: see PARA 1060.

4 Thomas v Williams (1830) 10 B & C 664. The promise, however, may be severable, in which case, although unenforceable as regards the unsecured debt, it will be good as regards the secured debt: see Wood v Benson (1831) 2 Cr & J 94.

1063. Essential object of agreement.

For the case to fall within the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup>, the main or immediate object of the agreement between the parties must be to secure the payment of a debt or the fulfilment of a duty by a third person<sup>2</sup>.

Hence, the promise of a del credere agent who, for a higher commission, guarantees the solvency of those to whom he sells his principal's goods need not be in writing<sup>3</sup>. Such a contract is not really one of guarantee, but one settling the terms on which an agent is to be employed<sup>4</sup>, its main object being not to obtain a guarantee in respect of a third person's debt or liability but to secure the exercise of greater care by the agent in selling only to solvent purchasers<sup>5</sup>.

If, however, the payment of a third person's debt is the main object of a contract, the statute applies, whatever the motive may be for entering into the contract<sup>6</sup>.

1 See the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4; and PARA 1052.

2 Macrory v Scott (1850) 5 Exch 907 at 914. Thus, the statute does not apply to an agreement by which property already pledged for one debt is pledged for another, and where, although its ultimate object is the payment of a third person's debt, its immediate object is only to appropriate a fund in a particular way: Macrory v Scott. This rule also covers the property cases dealt with in PARA 1062: see Harburg India Rubber Comb Co v Martin [1902] 1 KB 778, CA.

3 Couturier v Hastie (1852) 8 Exch 40; revsd on other grounds (1856) 5 HL Cas 673; Wickham v Wickham (1855) 2 K & J 478; Wolff v Koppel 5 Hill 458 (NY, 1846); Fleet v Murton (1871) LR 7 QB 126 at 132-133 per Blackburn J. An agreement in the nature of a del credere agreement may even be inferred from evidence of the course of conduct between the parties: Shaw v Woodcock (1827) 7 B & C 73. As to the meaning of 'del credere agent' see AGENCY vol 1 (2008) PARA 13.

C. NATURE OF WRITTEN EVIDENCE REQUIRED

1064. Satisfying the statutory requirements.

The Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup> prescribes two separate ways in which a contract of guarantee may be made enforceable. The first way is by having a written<sup>2</sup> agreement signed<sup>3</sup> by the party to be charged or his agent<sup>4</sup>. The second way is by having a note or memorandum<sup>5</sup> of the agreement similarly signed. In the latter case, the agreement itself may be oral<sup>6</sup>.

1 See the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4; and PARA 1052.

2 'Writing' includes typing, printing, lithography, photography and other modes of representing or reproducing words in a visible form: Interpretation Act 1978 s 5, Sch 1. This definition applies to Acts whenever passed: s 22(1), Sch 2 para 4(1)(b).

1065. A written agreement.

The requirements of the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup> will be satisfied where the contract of guarantee is made in writing, signed by the guarantor or his agent<sup>2</sup>. The requirements as to writing are equally applicable to a contract to give a guarantee<sup>3</sup> as to a contract of guarantee itself<sup>4</sup>.

3 It is a question of construction whether the words used amount to a guarantee or an offer to give one: see Jones v Williams (1841) 7 M & W 493; Bank of Montreal v Munster Bank (1876) 11 IR 47; Jays Ltd v Sala (1898) 14 TLR 461.

GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/C. NATURE OF WRITTEN EVIDENCE REQUIRED/1066. A written memorandum.

1066. A written memorandum.

As well as by a written agreement<sup>1</sup>, the requirements of the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>2</sup> may be satisfied by any sufficient note or memorandum of the promise of guarantee signed by the guarantor or his agent<sup>3</sup>. The memorandum will usually come into existence as a record of an already completed contract<sup>4</sup>. However, in one exceptional case, the memorandum may antedate the contract. Where there is a written and signed offer of guarantee, there will be a sufficient memorandum to bind the offeror, whether the acceptance of that offer is oral<sup>5</sup> or written<sup>6</sup>.

The existence of such a memorandum before a claim is brought is, however, essential<sup>7</sup>. This is anomalous, since the Statute of Frauds affects only the mode of proof, but the rule is founded on the wording of the relevant statutory provision<sup>8</sup>.

The statute need only once be satisfied by a memorandum in writing<sup>9</sup>. Where the original written evidence of a guarantee is lost, oral evidence of its having existed is admissible<sup>10</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/C. NATURE OF WRITTEN EVIDENCE REQUIRED/1067. Form of agreement or memorandum.

1067. Form of agreement or memorandum.

No special form of words is required to be used in framing a guarantee<sup>1</sup>, and the word 'guarantee' need not be employed, since what is material is the substance of the contract, not the name or form given to it by the parties<sup>2</sup>.

The rules governing the form of the memorandum of any other class of contract required by statute to be evidenced in writing apply in the case of a memorandum of a guarantee<sup>3</sup>. The document need not have been intended as a memorandum<sup>4</sup>. The following are examples<sup>5</sup> of documents which have been held to constitute a sufficient memorandum: a rough draft, the parties contemplating the execution of a more formal agreement<sup>6</sup>; a recital in a will<sup>7</sup>; an affidavit<sup>8</sup>; a letter to a third party<sup>9</sup>, including an agent of the guarantor<sup>10</sup> or his solicitor<sup>11</sup>, or the solicitor of the other party<sup>12</sup>; a reply to a requisition<sup>13</sup>; a receipt<sup>14</sup>; a resolution in the minute book of a company<sup>15</sup>; a pleading in previous proceedings<sup>16</sup>; a telegram<sup>17</sup>; a telex message<sup>18</sup>; a statement in a rent book<sup>19</sup>; a recital in a settlement<sup>20</sup>; and a signed entry in the guarantor's own diary<sup>21</sup>.

The memorandum must contain an express or implied recognition that a contract of guarantee was entered into<sup>22</sup>. So a document acknowledging the existence of a contract but repudiating liability under it may be a sufficient memorandum<sup>23</sup>, but not a document cancelling the contract<sup>24</sup> nor a document denying the existence of a contract<sup>25</sup>. The Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>26</sup> does not preclude an application for rectification of a memorandum of guarantee to correct errors<sup>27</sup>.

The indorsement by a guarantor of his undertaking to be answerable, made on the agreement between the principal debtor and the creditor, and referring to it, suffices<sup>28</sup>.

If the limit on a guarantee is to be increased then the necessary amendment must itself constitute a sufficient memorandum for the purposes of the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>29</sup>.

A promise to guarantee the due honouring of a bill or note is within the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup>. However, a person who signs a bill of exchange as guarantor for the acceptor will be liable to the drawer or payee upon proof that that is what the parties intended<sup>2</sup>, even in the absence of a writing sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds<sup>3</sup>.

A contract of guarantee may be made (1) by a company<sup>1</sup>, by writing under its common seal<sup>2</sup>; or (2) on behalf of a company, by any person acting under its authority, express or implied<sup>3</sup>. The requirements of the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>4</sup> apply to a guarantee by a company as they apply to guarantees by an individual<sup>5</sup>.

Directors may bind themselves personally by a guarantee which they sign or adopt<sup>6</sup>. When, therefore, they do not intend to bind themselves personally, but are acting solely on behalf of the company, they should be careful to word the contract accordingly<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'company' see PARA 1031 note 1.

2 A company is no longer obliged to have a company seal. The same effect is produced if the document is signed by two directors (or, in the case of a private company, by a director and secretary). On the execution of documents generally see the Companies Act 1985 s 36A (repealed for certain purposes) (as to replacement provisions see the Companies Act 2006 s 44; and COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 288).

In those cases, directors' signatures on behalf of the company as principal debtor were held to be sufficient to satisfy the statute and to make the guarantee recited in those contracts enforceable against the directors as guarantors. There are two situations in which a memorandum may be constituted by two or more documents: (1) if all the documents are signed by the guarantor or his agent and can be seen to refer to the same transaction<sup>1</sup>; (2) if only one of the documents is so signed, but that document contains some express or implied reference to another document, then oral evidence is admissible to identify that other document and the two documents may be read together<sup>2</sup>.

1071. Description of parties.

In order to satisfy the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup>, all the contracting parties must be named or sufficiently described as such in writing<sup>2</sup>. It is insufficient that their names are mentioned merely as descriptive of the subject matter of the contract<sup>3</sup>. The memorandum need not, however, be addressed to the other contracting party<sup>4</sup>.

A mere misdescription, whether it be of one of the parties or of the principal debtor, will not render a guarantee unenforceable<sup>5</sup>. It is otherwise where the name of the principal debtor is omitted<sup>6</sup>.

memorandum, not addressed to or naming anybody, will enure for the benefit of those to whom or for whose use it was delivered, can scarcely be supported. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/C. NATURE OF WRITTEN EVIDENCE REQUIRED/1072. Written evidence of consideration unnecessary.

1072. Written evidence of consideration unnecessary.

By virtue of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856, provided that the requirements of the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>1</sup> are otherwise satisfied, a guarantee will not be unenforceable by reason only that the consideration for the guarantor's promise<sup>2</sup> does not appear in writing or by necessary inference from a written document<sup>3</sup>.

The 1856 Act does not make a promise good which was not so before<sup>4</sup>, but merely dispenses with any written statement of the consideration. It does not dispense with the necessity for a consideration<sup>5</sup>. If the written memorandum states a bad consideration, it will not be helped by the Act<sup>6</sup>. It seems that the parties are bound by any written statement of the consideration which they choose to make<sup>7</sup>, although, in cases of ambiguity, oral evidence is admissible to show that the consideration alleged is sufficient in law<sup>8</sup>. Where the whole promise cannot be collected from the written memorandum of the contract, the Statute of Frauds is not satisfied, and oral evidence of the consideration may not be given in order to explain the promise<sup>9</sup>. It is not, however, necessary for a written memorandum of guarantee, even though it unnecessarily embodies the consideration, to state by whom the consideration is payable, if this can be inferred, and the meaning then is that it was paid by the party to whom the memorandum was given<sup>10</sup>.

1 See the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4; and PARA 1052.

2 It was formerly held that, because the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4 required 'the agreement' to be in writing, there had to be written evidence, not only of the promise, but also of the consideration, in order to satisfy the requirements of the statute (see Wain v Warlters (1804) 5 East 10; 1 Smith LC (13th Edn) 358; Saunders v Wakefield (1821) 4 B & Ald 595; Egerton v Mathews (1805) 6 East 307), as the two together constitute the agreement, in the case of every contract not made by deed (Herman v Jeuchner (1885) 15 QBD 561 at 563, CA, per Sir Baliol Brett MR). The cases as to whether the consideration for the promise of guarantee duly appeared in writing, or by necessary inference from a written document, so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4 (now as amended) are very numerous. The Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856 s 3 (as to which see note 3; and PARA 1055) has made these cases obsolete. However, as the principles established by them are still sometimes invoked when it has to be determined whether the surety's promise is sufficiently stated in writing, a brief reference will be made to them. From these cases it appears that it was not necessary that the consideration should be stated in express terms, it being sufficient if the written memorandum were so framed that a person of ordinary capacity must infer from it what the consideration really was (see Hawes v Armstrong (1835) 1 Scott 661; Caballero v Slater (1854) 14 CB 300; Jarvis v Wilkins (1841) 7 M & W 410; Goldshede v Swan (1847) 1 Exch 154), or if the nature of the consideration could be inferred from the written memorandum (see James v Williams (1834) 4 B & Ad 1109; Raikes v Todd (1838) 8 Ad & El 846; Thackwell v Gardiner (1851) 5 De G & Sm 58), with or without the aid of oral evidence as to extrinsic circumstances, or the meaning of the words used (see Edwards v Jevons (1849) 8 CB 436; Goldshede v Swan above; Bainbridge v Wade (1850) 16 QB 89; Russell v Moseley (1822) 3 Brod & Bing 211). On the other hand, the written memorandum was held to be insufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds if two distinct considerations could, with equal probability, be inferred from it as the inducement for the guarantor's promise: Baring v Grieve (1858) 6 WR 466; and see Bentham v Cooper (1839) 5 M & W 621; Cole v Dyer (1831) 1 Cr & J 461. When a defendant to an action on a guarantee pleaded that there was no memorandum in writing of the consideration, the plaintiff was at liberty to reply that the consideration was in writing without setting out the actual memorandum in his pleading: see Wakeham v Sutton (1834) 2 Ad & El 78. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/C. NATURE OF WRITTEN EVIDENCE REQUIRED/1073. Memorandum must include all material terms.

1073. Memorandum must include all material terms.

Except for the consideration<sup>1</sup>, the memorandum must evidence all the material terms of the contract of guarantee which have been expressly agreed<sup>2</sup>. However, it need not state any term which would be implied<sup>3</sup>. Nor need it state terms which form part of an independent collateral contract<sup>4</sup>. Objective extrinsic evidence is admissible to explain the meaning of the terms used in the memorandum<sup>5</sup>.

Oral evidence is admissible to show that a written document is not itself a contract and therefore at the most a memorandum, and then to show that the document does not record all the terms of the contract<sup>6</sup>.

Where a term omitted from the memorandum is solely for the creditor's benefit, he may waive it and enforce the guarantee as evidenced in the memorandum<sup>7</sup>. Equally, if the omitted term is exclusively for the benefit of the guarantor, the creditor may consent to be bound by the omitted term and the entire agreement may then be enforced<sup>8</sup>.

The equitable remedy of rectification may be available where a term has been omitted from a written contract of guarantee owing to a mistake, provided that there is either a prior concluded agreement or a clear common intention of the parties which had some outward expression of accord<sup>9</sup>. Where the remedy is available the court may in one claim both rectify the contract and enforce it<sup>10</sup>.

GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/C. NATURE OF WRITTEN EVIDENCE REQUIRED/1074. Who must sign memorandum.

1074. Who must sign memorandum.

The memorandum need only be signed by the party to be charged or his agent<sup>1</sup>. A guarantee drawn up in the plural number, and concluding 'as witness our hands', but signed by one guarantor only, is a sufficient memorandum to be binding on the guarantor who signed it<sup>2</sup>. A guarantee beginning 'we hereby guarantee', signed with the name of a firm, and also by each of the partners of the firm, operates as a separate guarantee by each partner as well as a joint guarantee by the firm<sup>3</sup>. A person who signs a guarantee as agent (for example, on behalf of a company of which he is a director) does not thereby assume personal liability even if he has given verbal assurances to the creditor<sup>4</sup>.

1 Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4: see PARA 1052 et seq; and Laythorp v Bryant (1836) 2 Bing NC 735 at 743; Smith v Neale (1857) 2 CBNS 67; Liverpool Borough Bank v Eccles (1859) 4 H & N 139; Reuss v Picksley (1866) LR 1 Exch 342. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/C. NATURE OF WRITTEN EVIDENCE REQUIRED/1075. Memorandum signed by agent.

1075. Memorandum signed by agent.

An agent, authorised orally or in writing, may sign the memorandum<sup>1</sup>. He need not be of full age and capacity<sup>2</sup>. Nor, in order to render his principal liable, need he expressly sign as agent, oral evidence being admissible to show in what capacity he did sign<sup>3</sup>. Where reliance is placed on the signature of an agent as satisfying the Statute of Frauds (1677)<sup>4</sup>, it must be shown that the agent signing was duly authorised, whether the document signed is a record of the terms or a document referring to and recognising the document actually containing the record of the terms<sup>5</sup>. An oral ratification of the agent's signature is sufficient where he was not previously authorised<sup>6</sup>.

Certain agents possess implied authority to sign a guarantee<sup>7</sup>. Thus, a broker employed to buy or sell goods, it seems, possesses it<sup>8</sup>, but not a solicitor<sup>9</sup>. Nor has a person who is also a party to a contract any implied authority to sign for another contracting party, either by himself<sup>10</sup> or his employee<sup>11</sup>.

1075 Memorandum signed by agent

NOTE 6--Repeal of Companies Act 1985 s 36C in force 1 October 2009: SI 2008/2860.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iii) Form of Contract of Guarantee/C. NATURE OF WRITTEN EVIDENCE REQUIRED/1076. What is a sufficient signature.

1076. What is a sufficient signature.

The word 'signed' has been given an extended meaning by the courts; and the rules as to what is a sufficient signature are the same in the case of a guarantee as in the case of any other contract required to be evidenced in writing<sup>1</sup>.

A signature in pencil is sufficient<sup>2</sup>, as is a signature by initials<sup>3</sup>, or by means of a stamp or mark<sup>4</sup>. It is not necessary to prove that the person making the mark could not write his name<sup>5</sup>. A printed heading of the name of the guarantor<sup>6</sup> is a sufficient signature if the remainder of the document is written by him or at his dictation<sup>7</sup>, or is at the time or subsequently acknowledged by him<sup>8</sup>. The signature of instructions for a telegram is sufficient<sup>9</sup>, and a telegram itself may afford a sufficient signature, since the telegraph clerk may have the power delegated to him to sign<sup>10</sup>. The answerback of the sender of a telex probably constitutes a sufficient signature<sup>11</sup>.

The signature must be so placed as to authenticate every material and operative part of the instrument<sup>12</sup>.

Provided that there is a contract of guarantee<sup>13</sup>, the intention with which the guarantor signs the memorandum evidencing that contract is irrelevant<sup>14</sup>. The signature of the guarantor as testator to a will reciting the guarantee<sup>15</sup>, as signatory on behalf of the principal debtor to an agreement containing the guarantee<sup>16</sup>, and as a witness<sup>17</sup>, have all been held to be sufficient.

1077. Alteration after signature.

If the document is altered before the contract of guarantee is concluded, or is altered in order to correct a mistake in the written statement of an existing contract of guarantee, a signature already on the document will authenticate the alteration if the guarantor orally assents to the alteration<sup>1</sup>. Where, however, the alteration affects or evidences an amendment to an existing contract, oral consent is insufficient; there must be either a fresh signature (such as initialling the alteration), or some words or gestures sufficient to revive the existing signature<sup>2</sup>.

An immaterial alteration, such as the correction of an innocent misdescription of the principal debtor, will not prevent the guarantee being enforceable, even if the guarantor does not assent to the alteration being made<sup>3</sup>. However, a material alteration, not approved by all the parties to the original document, will render the guarantee void<sup>4</sup>. For a deed or other instrument to be rendered invalid by an alteration, the party seeking to avoid the contract must demonstrate that the alteration is one which is potentially prejudicial to his legal rights or obligations. Without an element of potential prejudice, no inference of fraud or improper motive is appropriate. There is, however, no division of rights and obligations contained within a contract or other instrument into essential terms to which the rule applies and procedural terms to which it does not; the critical question is one of prejudice or potential prejudice as a result of the alteration<sup>5</sup>.

1079. Consumer credit legislation.

Under the EC Consumer Credit Directive<sup>1</sup>, certain credit agreements must be made in writing and the consumer must receive a copy of the written agreement which must include a statement of the annual percentage rate of charge and a statement of the conditions under which the annual percentage rate of charge may be amended<sup>2</sup>. The written agreement must further include the other essential terms of the contract<sup>3</sup>. Member states must afford other statutory protections for consumers with regard to advances on current accounts<sup>4</sup>, repossession of goods bought on credit<sup>5</sup>, early discharge of the obligations under a credit agreement<sup>6</sup>, assignment of the agreement<sup>7</sup>, making payment or giving security by means of bills of exchange including promissory notes<sup>8</sup>, consumers' rights against a supplier of goods on credit<sup>9</sup> and official authorisation of persons offering credit<sup>10</sup>. Member states must ensure that the provisions which they adopt in implementation of these requirements are not circumvented as a result of the way in which agreements are formulated, in particular by the device of distributing the amount of credit over several agreements<sup>11</sup>. It has, however, been held that these requirements do not cover a contract of guarantee for the repayment of credit where neither the guarantor nor the borrower is acting in the course of his trade or profession<sup>12</sup>.

Although some changes to secondary legislation were made in order to implement the Consumer Credit Directive into domestic law<sup>13</sup>, the Consumer Credit Act 1974 already met and in some respects exceeded the requirements of the directive<sup>14</sup>. A contract of guarantee may be regulated by the 1974 Act, in which case it is subject to particular requirements which are discussed below<sup>15</sup> and in more detail elsewhere in this work<sup>16</sup>.

1079 Consumer credit legislation

TEXT AND NOTES--Directive 87/102 repealed and replaced from 12 May 2010 by European Parliament and EC Council Directive 2008/48 (OJ L133, 22.5.2008, p 66) on credit agreements for consumers.

Halsbury's Laws of England/FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS (VOLUME 48 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1-589; VOLUME 49 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 590-1619; VOLUME 50 (2008) 5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iv) Miscellaneous Legislation Applying to Guarantees/1080. Other consumer protection legislation.

1080. Other consumer protection legislation.

Numerous measures have been made by the European Community to protect and promote the interests of consumers, including EC Council Directive of 20 December 1985 to protect the consumer in respect of contracts negotiated away from business premises<sup>1</sup> and EC Council Directive of 20 May 1997 on the protection of consumers in respect of distance contracts<sup>2</sup>. The European Court of Justice has held that a contract which benefits a third party standing outside the contractual relationship, such as a guarantee securing the performance of a credit agreement, is not excluded from the scope of the first of these directives on the sole ground that the goods or services purchased are intended for the use of that third party. However, since the directive is only designed to protect consumers, a contract of guarantee only comes within its scope where the guarantor has entered into a commitment for a purpose which can be 'regarded as outside his trade or profession'. It follows that a contract of guarantee concluded by a natural person who was not acting in the course of his trade or profession does not come under the protection of the directive where it guarantees repayment of a debt contracted by another person who, for his part, was acting within the course of his trade or profession<sup>3</sup>. It appears that guarantees of loans made to the principal debtor for private, as opposed to business, purposes, will fall within the directives mentioned above and the regulations implementing them for the purposes of domestic law<sup>4</sup>.

Contracts of guarantee may also fall within the provisions of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977<sup>5</sup> and of EC Council Directive of 5 April 1993 on unfair terms in consumer contracts<sup>6</sup> and the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999<sup>7</sup> implementing that directive. Consumer protection legislation is discussed in detail elsewhere in this work<sup>8</sup>.

It is apprehended that contracts of guarantee do not, without more, fall within the category of excepted contracts in reg 3.

1081. The Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995.

Under the Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995, a tenant who assigns premises demised to him is released from the tenant covenants of the tenancy<sup>1</sup> but may enter into an authorised guarantee agreement<sup>2</sup> with respect to the performance of those covenants by the assignee<sup>3</sup>. The rules of law relating to guarantees<sup>4</sup> are, subject to its terms, applicable in relation to any authorised guarantee agreement as in relation to any other guarantee agreement<sup>5</sup>. These provisions only apply in relation to tenancies which are 'new tenancies' for the purposes of the 1995 Act<sup>6</sup>.

The 1995 Act also restricts the liability of a former tenant or his guarantor for rent and service charges<sup>7</sup>. These provisions, which apply to both 'old' and 'new' tenancies<sup>8</sup>, are discussed elsewhere in this work<sup>9</sup>.

1 See the Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995 s 5; and LANDLORD AND TENANT vol 27(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 582.

2 For these purposes an agreement is an authorised guarantee agreement if: (1) under it the tenant guarantees the performance of the relevant covenant to any extent by the assignee; and (2) it is entered into in the circumstances set out in the Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995 s 16(3); and (3) its provisions conform with s 16(4), (5): s 16(2). Those circumstances are as follows: (a) by virtue of a covenant against assignment (whether absolute or qualified) the assignment cannot be effected without the consent of the landlord under the tenancy or some other person; (b) any such consent is given subject to a condition (lawfully imposed) that the tenant is to enter into an agreement guaranteeing the performance of the covenant by the assignee; and (c) the agreement is entered into by the tenant in pursuance of that condition: s 16(3). An agreement is not an authorised guarantee agreement to the extent that it purports to impose on the tenant any requirement to guarantee in any way the performance of the relevant covenant by any person other than the assignee or to impose on the tenant any liability, restriction or other requirement (of whatever nature) in relation to any time after the assignee is released from that covenant by virtue of the Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995: s 16(4). Subject to s 16(4), an authorised guarantee agreement may: (i) impose on the tenant any liability as sole or principal debtor in respect of any obligation owed by the assignee under the relevant covenant; (ii) impose on the tenant liabilities as guarantor in respect of the assignee's performance of that covenant which are no more onerous than those to which he would be subject in the event of his being liable as sole or principal debtor in respect of any obligation owed by the assignee under that covenant; (iii) require the tenant, in the event of the tenancy assigned by him being disclaimed, to enter into a new tenancy of the premises comprised in the assignment whose term expires not later than the term of the tenancy assigned by the tenant and whose tenant covenants are no more onerous than those of that tenancy; (iv) make provision incidental or supplementary to any provision made by virtue of any of heads (i)-(iii) above: s 16(5).

3 Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995 s 16(1). For these purposes it is immaterial that (1) the tenant has already made an authorised guarantee agreement in respect of a previous assignment by him of the tenancy referred to in s 16(1), it having been subsequently vested in him following a disclaimer on behalf of the previous assignee; or (2) the tenancy referred to in s 16(1) is a new tenancy entered into by the tenant in pursuance of an authorised guarantee agreement; and in any such case s 16(2)-(5) apply accordingly: s 16(7).

- 4 In particular those relating to the release of sureties: Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995 s 16(8).
- 5 Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995 s 16(8).
- 6 Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995 s 1(1). For these purposes, a tenancy is a new tenancy if it is granted on or after 1 January 1996 otherwise than in pursuance of an agreement entered into before that date or an order of a court made before that date: s 1(3). See further LANDLORD AND TENANT vol 27(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 578.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(iv) Miscellaneous Legislation Applying to Guarantees/1082. No stamp duty or stamp duty land tax on guarantees.

1082. No stamp duty or stamp duty land tax on guarantees.

The stamp duty formerly imposed upon the memorandum of a guarantee is no longer chargeable<sup>1</sup>. Nor is stamp duty land tax chargeable on such a memorandum<sup>2</sup>.

1 The requirement that stamp duty should be paid on a guarantee neither under seal nor given for periodical payments was repealed by the Finance Act 1970 Sch 7 para 1(2)(a) (repealed with effect from 1 October 1999 by the Finance Act 1999 Sch 20 Pt V(2)). Ad valorem duty on guarantees was abolished by the Finance Act 1971 s 64 (likewise repealed); and the fixed duty of 50p on all documents (including guarantees) executed under seal was abolished by the Finance Act 1985 ss 85(1), 98, Schs 24, 27. Stamp duty is now chargeable only on instruments relating to stock or marketable securities (see the Finance Act 2003 s 125(1)) and is not chargeable on any description of instrument in respect of which duty was abolished by the Finance Act 1971 s 64 (repealed) (see the Finance Act 1999 s 112(3), Sch 13 para 25). See further STAMP DUTY AND STAMP DUTY RESERVE TAX.

2 A security interest is an exempt interest (Finance Act 2003 s 48(2)(a)) and for these purposes 'security interest' means an interest or right (other than a rentcharge) held for the purpose of securing the payment of money or the performance of any other obligation (s 48(2), (3)).

(v) Construction of Guarantees

1083. Principles of construction.

The principles of construction governing contracts in general<sup>1</sup> apply equally to contracts of guarantee<sup>2</sup>. Dealing with a guarantee as a mercantile contract, the court does not apply to it merely technical rules, but construes it so as to reflect what may fairly be inferred to have been the parties' real intention and understanding as expressed by them in writing<sup>3</sup>, and so as to give effect to it rather than not<sup>4</sup>.

1 The principles by which contractual documents are construed are summarised in Investors' Compensation Scheme Ltd v West Bromwich Building Society [1998] 1 All ER 98 at 114 et seq, [1998] 1 WLR 896 at 912 et seq, HL, per Lord Hoffmann, applied in the context of guarantees in eg Static Control Components (Europe) Ltd v Egan [2004] EWCA Civ 392, [2004] 2 Lloyd's Rep 429, [2004] All ER (D) 04 (Apr); and see UCB Corporate Services Ltd v Thomason [2004] EWHC 1164 (Ch), [2004] 2 All ER (Comm) 774, [2004] All ER (D) 278 (May) (construction of agreement to waive liabilities pursuant to guarantees provided in respect of loan).

'The object sought to be achieved in construing any commercial contract is to ascertain what were the mutual intentions of the parties as to the legal obligations each assumed by the contractual words in which they . . . chose to express them; or, perhaps more accurately, what each would have led the other reasonably to assume were the acts that he was promising to do or to refrain from doing by the words in which the promises on his part were expressed': Pioneer Shipping Ltd v BTP Tioxide Ltd [1982] AC 724 at 736, [1981] 2 All ER 1030 at 1035, HL, per Lord Diplock. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(v) Construction of Guarantees/1084. Construing the guarantee in its context.

1084. Construing the guarantee in its context.

The modern approach of the courts is to use all the available aids for the construction of written documents to seek out from the words used what they believe to have been the true intention of the parties<sup>1</sup> when the guarantee was executed and not to be over-constrained by an interpretation based purely on internal linguistic considerations<sup>2</sup>.

Extrinsic evidence may assist in this process in two distinct ways. First, extrinsic evidence of the factual situation is admissible and necessary for the purpose of ascertaining whether particular words in the guarantee apply to that factual situation or whether that factual situation comes within particular words<sup>3</sup>. Second, extrinsic evidence of the context in which the contract was made is admissible in order to construe the terms of the contract<sup>4</sup>. A mercantile contract such as a guarantee is particularly susceptible of explanation by reference to the circumstances existing at the time it was made<sup>5</sup>.

So, where the context showed that this was the clear intention of the parties, a guarantee expressed to cover the liabilities of a named company was held, on its true construction, to cover also the liabilities of that company's subsidiary through which the loan had in fact been made<sup>6</sup>. Similarly, a guarantee which did not state expressly that it covered the principal debtor's own liability as guarantor was held to do so, because the factual background showed that this was what the parties intended<sup>7</sup>. On the same basis, a guarantee of 'the proposed leasing' was construed with the aid of extrinsic evidence concerning the factual background known to the parties at or before the date of the guarantee<sup>8</sup> so as to cover the leasing arrangements which were in fact eventually entered into between the creditor and the principal debtor<sup>9</sup>.

Extrinsic evidence has also been held admissible to show that one of the apparent parties to the guarantee in fact contracted as agent for the creditor<sup>10</sup>; to show that a guarantee was subject to a condition precedent<sup>11</sup>; to show whether the guarantee refers to a past or future credit<sup>12</sup>; to show whether the consideration for a guarantee was that the creditor should refrain from suing the principal debtor for a specified period or that he should refrain altogether from suing him<sup>13</sup>; to identify matters referred to in the memorandum of guarantee<sup>14</sup>; to show whether a person is really a guarantor entitled to contribution, or a guarantor for his co-sureties<sup>15</sup>; and generally to show the surrounding circumstances and the position of the contracting parties at the time that the guarantee was entered into<sup>16</sup>.

However, neither evidence of negotiations nor direct evidence of the parties' intentions is admissible in construing a written contract such as a guarantee<sup>17</sup>. Nor is it permissible to take into account the actions of the parties after the contract was made, unless those actions evidence a new agreement or are the basis of an estoppel<sup>18</sup>.

Where unambiguous words have been used in a contract of guarantee, the court has a duty to attempt to interpret the contract by giving the words their ordinary meaning<sup>19</sup>.

1085. Construction contra proferentem.

Where, applying the principles of construction discussed in the preceding paragraphs, the words of the guarantee remain ambiguous, the guarantee may be interpreted against the creditor who drafted it<sup>1</sup> and in favour of the guarantor<sup>2</sup>.

1 As to the contra proferentem rule generally see DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS vol 13 (2007 Reissue) PARAS 178-179.

2 Eastern Counties Building Society v Russell [1947] 2 All ER 734, CA; National House-Building Council v Fraser [1983] 1 All ER 1090 at 1092 per Sir Douglas Frank QC. See also First National Finance Corp Ltd v Goodman [1983] BCLC 203, CA; Coghlan v SH Lock (Australia) Ltd (1987) 3 BCC 183, PC. There are statements in some old authorities that guarantees should be construed strictly against the guarantor, on the basis that the guarantor is the maker of the instrument: see eg Mason v Pritchard (1810) 12 East 227; Mayer v Isaac (1840) 6 M & W 605; Merle v Wells (1810) 2 Camp 413. In other authorities, it is said that guarantees should be construed liberally in favour of the guarantor (see eg Nicholson v Paget (1832) 1 Cr & M 48 at 52 per Bayley B) or strictly against the creditor: see Eastern Counties Building Society v Russell [1947] 1 All ER 500 at 503 per Hilbery J (the Court of Appeal, in affirming his decision at [1947] 2 All ER 734, simply applied the contra proferentem rule); General Surety and Guarantee Co Ltd v Francis Parker Ltd (1977) 6 BLR 16 at 21, per Donaldson J; First National Finance Corp Ltd v Goodman above at 208 per Stephenson LJ; Coghlan v SH Lock (Australia) Ltd above at 187. See also Glyn v Hertel (1818) 8 Taunt 208; Bacon v Chesney (1816) 1 Stark 192; Stamford, Spalding and Boston Banking Co v Ball (1862) 4 De GF & J 310; Blest v Brown (1862) 4 De GF & J 367 at 376 per Lord Westbury LC. The conflict between these two approaches does not appear to have been discussed or expressly resolved in any modern English authority. However, the reasoning and the actual decisions reached in the cases cited in PARA 1084 strongly suggest that the approach adopted by Swift J was correct when he said: 'I do not see that a guarantor stands in any better position than any other contractor, and I do not see that this contract is to be construed in any different way from any other contract': Eshelby v Federated European Bank Ltd [1932] 1 KB 254 at 266, DC; affd [1932] 1 KB 423, CA. See also Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] AC 331 at 345, [1972] 2 All ER 393 at 399, HL, per Lord Reid, cited in PARA 1083 note 3. See also PARA 1084.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(v) Construction of Guarantees/1086. Recitals, footnotes and sidenotes.

1086. Recitals, footnotes and sidenotes.

Where the operative part of a guarantee is ambiguous<sup>1</sup>, but not otherwise<sup>2</sup>, its interpretation may be dependent upon its recitals<sup>3</sup>, where those recitals are inconsistent with a meaning which the operative part might otherwise have been taken to bear<sup>4</sup>.

The conditions of fidelity bonds are frequently explained by the recitals<sup>5</sup>. So in construing an agreement in the form of a bond in which a guarantor has become liable for the due fulfilment of an agent's duties therein particularly enumerated, a general clause in the obligatory part of the bond must be interpreted strictly and controlled by reference to the prior clauses specifying the extent of the agency<sup>6</sup>. Whether in a particular case the condition is capable of being restrained by the recital is not, however, always easy to determine<sup>7</sup>, although in many cases it will be found that the recital is the proper key to the meaning of the condition in a suretyship bond<sup>8</sup>. Where a guarantee recites a debt already in existence, express words are required to make it extend to any other debts<sup>9</sup>.

A guarantor is not estopped by a recital in a guarantee if it was intended as the statement of the creditor and not of the guarantor<sup>10</sup>, although he may be estopped if it was intended as his statement or as a statement which both parties have mutually agreed to admit as true<sup>11</sup>.

Where a standard printed form of guarantee supplied by the creditor contains footnotes or sidenotes for guidance, these may be used as an aid to construction of the contract only in cases of ambiguity<sup>12</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(1) THE CONTRACT OF GUARANTEE/(v) Construction of Guarantees/1088. Whether surety is liable for the whole or part of the debt.

1088. Whether surety is liable for the whole or part of the debt.

When the guarantor's liability is limited to a fixed sum, it depends on the wording of the guarantee whether the guarantor guarantees the whole debt, subject to the specified limitation on his total liability, or whether his guarantee is applicable to a part only of the debt, co-extensive with the amount of the guarantee<sup>1</sup>.

In the case of the bankruptcy of the principal debtor, the difference becomes material in determining whether the creditor may prove for the whole indebtedness, even though the guarantor has paid the sum for which he is liable, or whether the guarantor alone may prove for that sum<sup>2</sup>.

The question is usually determined in favour of the creditor by the inclusion of special terms in the guarantee. However, where the matter is not expressly dealt with, the following principles of construction are applicable.

Where a guarantor gives a continuing guarantee, limited in amount, to secure a floating balance which may from time to time be due from the principal debtor to the creditor, the guarantee is as between the guarantor and the creditor to be construed, prima facie at least, as applicable to a part only of the debt co-extensive with the amount of the guarantee<sup>3</sup>. This principle can, however, admit exceptions<sup>4</sup>. On the other hand, a guarantee, limited in amount, for a debt already ascertained which exceeds that limit is not, prima facie, to be construed as a security for part of the debt only, it being for the court to determine in such cases whether the intention was to guarantee the whole debt, with a limitation on the guarantor's liability, or to guarantee a part of the debt only<sup>5</sup>.

1089. Questions of law and fact.

Where there are no words of doubtful trade meaning, and the extrinsic facts are not in controversy, the question whether the words used by the parties amount to a contract of guarantee is one of law<sup>1</sup>. Where, however, a guarantor has agreed to guarantee a specific sum, it has been treated as a question of fact<sup>2</sup> to say whether this sum comprised money advanced before the date of the guarantee as well as a subsequent advance<sup>3</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(i) Special Characteristics/1090. Secondary liability of the guarantor.

(i) Special Characteristics

1090. Secondary liability of the guarantor.

There are two different kinds of guarantee<sup>1</sup>. One is a promise by the guarantor which becomes effective if the principal debtor fails to perform his obligations<sup>2</sup>. The other is a promise that the principal debtor will perform his obligations<sup>3</sup>. In both cases, the guarantor's liability is secondary<sup>4</sup>. The guarantor is under no liability if the principal debtor's obligation is discharged, by performance or otherwise, on or before the date of performance. In the one case, the conditional promise never becomes effective; in the other, there is no breach by the guarantor<sup>5</sup>.

Consequently a creditor may not, before any default has been committed, apply for a quia timet injunction against a guarantor to force him to set apart money to provide for the possibility of a debt becoming due from the principal debtor and the principal debtor making default<sup>6</sup>. Nor can the creditor obtain a freezing injunction<sup>7</sup> against the guarantor, because he has no accrued cause of action to support it<sup>8</sup>. On the other hand, a guarantor is no more justified in placing the whole of his property out of the reach of liability to pay the guaranteed debt than if he were the principal debtor<sup>9</sup>.

Both of these kinds of guarantee fall within the first of Lord Selborne's three classes of case to which the principles of the law of guarantees may apply: see Duncan, Fox & Co v North and South Wales Bank (1880) 6 App Cas 1 at 10-11, HL, per Lord Selborne LC; and PARA 1018.

4 The liability is secondary whenever the promise to be answerable for another does not exonerate that other from liability but leaves him primarily liable: Mallet v Bateman (1865) LR 1 CP 163 at 171, Ex Ch; Fahey v MSD Speirs Ltd [1973] 2 NZLR 655, NZ CA. Where the guarantor covenants jointly with the debtor and severally to pay a debt on a future day, the debt is not contingent, but present: Atkinson v Grey (1853) 1 Sm & G 577; see also Re Houlder [1929] 1 Ch 205.

5 General Produce Co v United Bank Ltd [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep 255 at 258 per Lloyd J (a promise to pay if the principal debtor does not do so, irrespective of any obligation on the part of the debtor, is not a guarantee). For the guarantor's liability where the principal obligation is discharged by the creditor's acceptance of the debtor's breach, or by insolvency, see PARA 1100. Similarly, the distinction between the two possible types of guarantee does not produce a material distinction in the guarantor's legal liability where the principal obligation has not been terminated: NRG Vision Ltd v Churchfield Leasing Ltd [1988] BCLC 624 at 635, 4 BCC 56 at 64-65, per Knox J.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(i) Special Characteristics/1091. Evidence of guarantor's liability.

1091. Evidence of guarantor's liability.

In a claim against the guarantor by the creditor, a judgment or award obtained by the creditor against the principal debtor is not evidence against the guarantor<sup>1</sup>. This is so even if the arbitration award arises from an arbitration clause in the contract which contains the obligations of the principal debtor which are the subject of the guarantee<sup>2</sup>. However, such a judgment or award may bind the guarantor if the guarantee on its true construction covers the liability of the principal debtor arising from the judgment or award itself<sup>3</sup>. In any event, the principal debtor's admissions of liability in such proceedings may be admissible as evidence against the guarantor if the requirements of the Civil Evidence Act 1995 are complied with<sup>4</sup>.

An account stated, delivered by an agent to his employer and charging himself, is evidence against the agent's guarantor on the question of appropriation of payments as between the agent and the employer<sup>5</sup>. After the death of the principal debtor, entries in his private records of receipts of money are admissible, as admissions against interest<sup>6</sup>. Similarly, entries in official books and reports which the person whose fidelity has been guaranteed was bound to keep as a duty incidental to his office are admissible after that person's death against the guarantor<sup>7</sup>.

1092. Conclusive evidence clauses.

Guarantees often contain a clause which states that a certificate or other document signed by or on behalf of the creditor shall be either prima facie or conclusive evidence against the guarantor of the extent of the principal debtor's liability to the creditor. Provided that they are expressed in sufficiently clear and explicit terms, such clauses are effective to bind the guarantor<sup>1</sup> in the absence of proof of fraud<sup>2</sup>, bad faith<sup>3</sup> or other special circumstances<sup>4</sup>.

4 In Dobbs v National Bank of Australasia Ltd (1935) 53 CLR 643 at 651, Aust HC, it was said that such a clause should not be interpreted as 'covering all grounds which go to the validity of the debt', citing illegality as an example. Manifest error may also prevent reliance on the clause: see Je Maintiendrai Pty Ltd v Australia and New Zealand Banking Group Ltd (1985) 38 SASR 70. It is also possible that the inclusion of a conclusive evidence clause in a standard form guarantee could be challenged under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 s 3: see CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 823 et seq. Cf Westpac Banking Corp v Sugden (1988) NSW Conv R 55-377 where, applying the Contracts Review Act 1980 (NSW), Brownlie J held that the conclusive evidence clause went far beyond what was reasonably necessary for the protection of the bank.

It has been said that a guarantor is a favoured debtor<sup>1</sup>. He is entitled to insist upon a rigid adherence to the terms of his obligation by the creditor, and cannot be made liable for more than he has undertaken<sup>2</sup>.

A receiver owes a duty, in equity, to the guarantor of a mortgagor's debt to act honestly and in good faith for the purpose of realising the security, and that duty may be more extensive, depending on the facts of any particular case<sup>3</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/A. SUBJECT MATTER OF LIABILITY/1094. Ascertaining the extent of liability.

1094. Ascertaining the extent of liability.

The extent of the liability undertaken by the guarantor will depend upon the terms of the contract of guarantee<sup>1</sup>. It need not be co-extensive with that of the principal debtor; but, in so far as it exceeds it, it is not a guarantee liability<sup>2</sup>.

In order to ascertain the extent of the guarantor's liability, if any, to the creditor, it is first necessary to determine the amount and nature of the principal debtor's debt to the creditor and the circumstances in which it has arisen. This having been done, the contract of guarantee should then be construed strictly to see whether it covers the nature, extent and circumstances of the principal debt sought to be recovered from the guarantor<sup>3</sup>.

1 See Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] AC 331 at 345, [1972] 2 All ER 393 at 399, HL, per Lord Reid. That contract will be construed in accordance with the principles set out in PARA 1083 et seq. The extent of the guarantor's liability is the same at law and in equity: Samuell v Howarth (1817) 3 Mer 272 at 278 per Lord Eldon LC; Ratcliffe v Graves (1683) 1 Vern 196.

However, it is probably of more general application. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/A. SUBJECT MATTER OF LIABILITY/1095. Nature of obligation guaranteed.

1095. Nature of obligation guaranteed.

A guarantor in a bond conditioned to answer for any balance which may become due from another to a bank is only liable for a balance which constitutes a legal debt<sup>1</sup>, that is to say a debt recoverable by bringing a claim<sup>2</sup>. If the guarantee stipulates that money is to be lent to a principal debtor, the money lent must, apparently, first have reached the creditor's hand, and then have been lent to the principal debtor, to render the surety liable<sup>3</sup>. Where a guarantee unlimited in amount is given in respect of goods to be supplied to another, there must be a subsequent genuine supply, and to a reasonable extent, to render the guarantor liable<sup>4</sup>, although, subject to this condition, the amount supplied is discretionary<sup>5</sup>. Similarly, any condition to be performed by the creditor to render the principal debtor liable must be performed before the guarantor can be made liable<sup>6</sup>.

A guarantee of 'future indebtedness' has been held to cover not only a present obligation to pay a sum certain in the future, but also an unquantified sum in the future or on a contingency, including an obligation arising in the future<sup>7</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/A. SUBJECT MATTER OF LIABILITY/1096. Guarantor not liable beyond terms of contract.

1096. Guarantor not liable beyond terms of contract.

A promissory note given by a principal debtor and guarantor for a definite sum, payable on a fixed day, is presumed to be given in consideration of an advance at the date of the note, and not in payment of the balance of an account current between the principal debtor and the creditor, and unless this presumption is disproved the advance must have been made if the guarantor is to be liable<sup>1</sup>.

A guarantor who guarantees the payment of a bill of exchange to be drawn for a specific sum is not liable, even to the extent of that sum, on a bill given for a larger sum<sup>2</sup>. However, a guarantee given to a bank requiring the payment of a given sum will not be discharged by the creditor's subsequently agreeing to require a lesser sum from the debtor<sup>3</sup>; nor will a limited guarantee for money lent to a specified amount be invalidated by the fact of money being lent in excess of that amount, although the guarantor cannot be made liable beyond the amount prescribed by the guarantee<sup>4</sup>. A guarantee limited to the loan of a fixed sum will not extend the guarantor's liability for continuing payments made after part of that sum has been reimbursed<sup>5</sup>.

A guarantor for payment by joint purchasers of the purchase money of an estate will not be liable if it appears that one of the purported purchasers is not bound by the transaction<sup>6</sup>.

Where the consideration for the guarantor's promise is forbearance to sue, or to continue legal proceedings against, the principal debtor, all stipulations which constitute part of that consideration must be strictly complied with or the guarantor will not be bound<sup>7</sup>. Nor will a guarantor for payment of what may be recovered by the claimant in a claim be held liable if, in a case where the guarantee stipulates that the claim is to be defended, judgment is allowed to go by default<sup>8</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/A. SUBJECT MATTER OF LIABILITY/1097. Landlord and tenant.

1097. Landlord and tenant.

At common law, in the absence of clear words, a guarantor of a tenant's obligations will be liable only for those arising under the original contract which he guaranteed. Accordingly, where the landlord waives a notice to quit given by him to a yearly tenant and thereby creates a new tenancy, a guarantor for payment of the rent under the original tenancy is not liable for rent accruing after the time when the notice to quit would have expired<sup>1</sup>. Nor is a guarantor for the rent of a business tenancy liable for rent accruing due for the period during which the tenancy is statutorily extended<sup>2</sup>. Even where the guarantee is expressed to extend into that period, further clear words will be required in order to make the guarantor liable for interim rent<sup>3</sup> ordered to be paid in excess of the contractual rent<sup>4</sup>. But a guarantee of all rent payable under an agreement which provides for the extension of a tenancy at the tenant's option extends to rent accruing due in the further period<sup>5</sup>. The benefit of a guarantee runs with the reversion and is enforceable by the landlord from time to time<sup>6</sup>.

Under the Landlord and Tenant (Covenants) Act 1995, the liability of a former tenant or his guarantor for rent and service charges is restricted<sup>7</sup>. These provisions, which apply to both 'old' and 'new' tenancies, are discussed elsewhere in this work<sup>8</sup>.

1098. Limitation of guarantor's liability.

The guarantor's liability will not be unduly extended<sup>1</sup>. He will not, therefore, be liable for the costs of a fruitless claim by the creditor against the principal debtor if the creditor has given him no notice of his intention to sue the principal debtor<sup>2</sup>, nor when his liability is limited to a fixed sum will he be liable for interest on a larger sum<sup>3</sup>. It nevertheless comprises all transactions which naturally and reasonably are entered into on the faith of the guarantee<sup>4</sup>.

1 So, when an assurance company gave a bond to the Board of Trade covering any loss or damage occasioned to a bankrupt's estate by any default of the trustee, it was not liable to make good the trustee's default in payment of the penal interest exacted from him for improper retention of money of the estate: Board of Trade v Employers' Liability Assurance Corp'n Ltd [1910] 2 KB 649, CA.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/A. SUBJECT MATTER OF LIABILITY/1099. Liability for accruing interest.

1099. Liability for accruing interest.

A covenant by a guarantor for the due payment of interest during the continuance of a mortgage security obliges him to pay interest so long as the principal sum remains unpaid, and therefore after default has been made by the principal debtor in payment of the mortgage money on the day prescribed<sup>1</sup>; and if he guarantees the payment of a bill of exchange by the acceptor, he is liable for the interest on the amount if not paid when due<sup>2</sup>.

Even after the right to recover the principal sum from a guarantor has become statute-barred, interest due on it is sometimes recoverable<sup>3</sup>, although normally interest, being accessory to the principal, is irrecoverable when the claim to the principal is barred<sup>4</sup>.

The recovery of judgment against the principal debtor for the principal sum due operates to relieve the guarantor from liability to pay future interest<sup>5</sup>. The bankruptcy of the principal debtor will not relieve from further liability for interest a guarantor whose guarantee provides for payment of interest 'until repayment'<sup>6</sup>. However, the bankruptcy of the principal debtor will relieve from further liability for interest a guarantor who is to continue liable for that interest only so long as anything remains due in respect of the principal money<sup>7</sup>. Where a guarantor pays a sum in respect of interest due from the principal debtor, that sum ranks as interest and not as a sum in lieu of interest for the purpose of any provision concerned with the payment of interest<sup>8</sup>.

1 King v Greenhill (1843) 6 Man & G 59.

2 Ackermann v Ehrensperger (1846) 16 M & W 99. So too he is liable for interest on the sum secured by a bond with a penalty (Dawson v Raynes (1826) 2 Russ 466), for such a bond is an interest-bearing security, carrying interest, although not mentioned, beyond the date fixed for the payment of the debt (Re Dixon, Heynes v Dixon [1900] 2 Ch 561, CA); and see DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS vol 13 (2007 Reissue) PARA 126. There is no rule of law that upon a contract for the payment of money on a day certain, with interest at a fixed rate down to that day, a further contract for the continuance of the same rate of interest is to be implied: Cook v Fowler (1874) LR 7 HL 27 at 37 per Lord Selborne LC. 3 Parr's Banking Co Ltd v Yates [1898] 2 QB 460, CA, where interest, commission and other banking charges were construed as being guaranteed on the same basis as advances of principal, and consequently interest and charges accruing due within six years of action brought were recoverable even though there was no longer a right to recover the amount of the actual advances from the guarantor. Cf Re FitzGeorge, ex p Robson [1905] 1 KB 462, where a guarantor who guaranteed the payment of interest on a debenture bond, issued by a company, until repayment of the principal sum was held liable to make payment of such interest after the dissolution of the company.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/A. SUBJECT MATTER OF LIABILITY/1100. Liability after determination of the principal contract.

1100. Liability after determination of the principal contract.

Where the guaranteed obligation is properly discharged by performance, the obligations of a guarantor of that obligation are also thereby discharged<sup>1</sup>. Similarly, the guarantor will be discharged where the underlying contract is discharged by frustration before the time for performance<sup>2</sup>.

However, the creditor's termination of the principal contract, whether by the exercise of an express right of termination<sup>3</sup> or by acceptance of the debtor's breach<sup>4</sup>, will not discharge the guarantor from liability. Where the liability of the guarantor under the guarantee equals in extent and amount that of the principal debtor, the guarantor makes himself responsible for any loss sustained by the creditor through the principal debtor's default<sup>5</sup>. Thus, where a creditor accepts the repudiation by a debtor of an agreement to pay a debt by instalments, the guarantor for that agreement is liable to the creditor for instalments accrued but unpaid at the date of termination<sup>6</sup>, and for damages representing the total debt<sup>7</sup>.

Similarly, where the guarantee is of the tenant's obligations under a lease, the landlord's action in forfeiting the lease on the grounds of the tenant's breach of covenant will not release the guarantor from his liability in respect of accrued causes of action<sup>8</sup>. Nor will it relieve the guarantor from liability in respect of damage suffered by the landlord after the termination of the tenancy if that damage is referable to a breach of the tenant's covenants, for example a failure to yield up the premises in accordance with a covenant to do so<sup>9</sup>.

The insolvency of the principal debtor does not discharge the guarantor from liability<sup>10</sup>. Further, where the trustee or liquidator of an insolvent principal debtor disclaims onerous property, the statutory release of the principal debtor from liabilities in or in respect of the disclaimed property<sup>11</sup> does not operate also to release any guarantor for those liabilities<sup>12</sup>.

The position is less clear where the principal debtor enters into an individual voluntary arrangement under Part VIII<sup>13</sup> of the Insolvency Act 1986<sup>14</sup>.

1101. Guarantor's liability under fidelity guarantee, etc.

A guarantor's liability for the faithful discharge by another person of duties attaching to a particular office does not extend to losses incurred in respect of the performance by that other person of duties ordinarily performed by another official<sup>1</sup>, or subsequently imposed by statute<sup>2</sup>. So a policy for the guarantee of the fidelity of an assistant overseer of a parish was held not to cover defalcations committed by him as clerk of the parish council<sup>3</sup>.

A guarantor for the due performance of his duties by a deputy appointed by the Court of Protection of the property and affairs of a mental patient is not liable for any default made in respect of the receipt of rents and profits after the death of the patient, since the deputy himself is not responsible in that capacity<sup>4</sup>; but the guarantor is liable for everything for which the deputy is liable<sup>5</sup>.

The liability of a principal debtor and his guarantor on a bond with a penalty cannot exceed the penalty<sup>6</sup>.

B. WHEN GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY ARISES

1103. Debtor's default.

The guarantor's liability arises when the principal debtor has made default<sup>1</sup>, but not until then<sup>2</sup>.

To render the guarantor liable the default relied upon must not be due to the creditor's misconduct<sup>3</sup> or connivance<sup>4</sup>, nor, generally speaking, result from vis major, such as robbery with irresistible violence<sup>5</sup>.

It is not always easy to determine whether, in a particular case, a default has been committed, and, on this, precedent can only be suggestive<sup>6</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/B. WHEN GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY ARISES/1104. Notice of debtor's default unnecessary.

1104. Notice of debtor's default unnecessary.

On the default of the principal debtor causing loss to the creditor, the guarantor is, apart from special stipulation, immediately liable to the full extent of his obligation, without being entitled to require either notice of the default<sup>1</sup>, or previous recourse against the principal<sup>2</sup> or simultaneous recourse against co-guarantors<sup>3</sup>.

Unless a demand upon the principal debtor is necessary in order to establish the principal debtor's own liability to the creditor<sup>4</sup>, it is not necessary for the creditor, before proceeding against the guarantor, to request the principal debtor to pay<sup>5</sup>. Nor is it necessary for the creditor to sue the principal debtor, although solvent<sup>6</sup>, or to take arbitration proceedings against him even though the principal contract contains an arbitration clause<sup>7</sup>, unless this is expressly stipulated for in the guarantee<sup>8</sup>.

Nor is it necessary for the creditor to prosecute the principal debtor for any offence he may have committed<sup>9</sup> unless this is rendered essential by the terms of the guarantee<sup>10</sup>, or to resort to securities for the guaranteed debt received by the creditor from the principal debtor<sup>11</sup>.

However, service of a default notice under Part VII of the Consumer Credit Act 1974<sup>12</sup> is necessary before the creditor can become entitled, by reason of the debtor's breach of a regulated agreement<sup>13</sup> under that Act, to terminate the agreement, demand early repayment, treat any right conferred by the agreement on the debtor as terminated, restricted or deferred, or enforce any security<sup>14</sup>.

The reason for the rule is that it is the guarantor's duty to see that the principal pays or performs his duty, as the case may be: see Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd at 357 and at 408; and Wright v Simpson (1802) 6 Ves 714 at 734 per Lord Eldon LC.

4 Whether a demand is necessary in any given case is, essentially, a question of construction of the contract: Joachimson v Swiss Bank Corp [1921] 3 KB 110 at 129, CA, per Atkin LJ; MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) [1993] Ch 425 at 447, sub nom MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) (No 2) [1993] 3 All ER 769 at 785, CA, per Dillon LJ. Generally, where there is a pre-existing debt, no demand is necessary to complete the creditor's cause of action, even where the debt is expressed to be payable on demand: see Rowe v Young (1820) 2 Bligh 391 at 465, HL per Bayley J; Re Brown's Estate, Brown v Brown [1893] 2 Ch 300; Bradford Old Bank Ltd v Sutcliffe [1918] 2 KB 833, CA; MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) above. However, there may be circumstances where a demand upon the principal debtor is necessary in order to establish his liability, for example where the creditor seeks to accelerate liability for payment of the whole of a debt otherwise payable by instalments (see eg Esso Petroleum Co Ltd v Alstonbridge Properties Ltd [1975] 3 All ER 358, [1975] 1 WLR 1474) or where the principal debtor's liability is itself a liability as guarantor (as in Coghlan v SH Lock (Australia) Ltd (1987) 8 NSWLR 88, 3 BCC 183, PC, and Bank of Scotland v Wright [1991] BCLC 244). In principle, a demand is necessary to terminate a bank overdraft facility and require repayment of the balance: see Rouse v Bradford Banking Co [1894] AC 586, HL; Cripps (Pharmaceuticals) Ltd v Wickenden [1973] 2 All ER 606 at 616, sub nom RA Cripps & Son Ltd v Wickenden [1973] 1 WLR 944 at 954-55, per Goff J; and cf Joachimson v Swiss Bank Corp above. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/B. WHEN GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY ARISES/1105. Demand.

1105. Demand.

Modern guarantee forms usually require the guarantor to pay on demand<sup>1</sup>. In such cases, a valid demand is a necessary ingredient of the creditor's cause of action against the guarantor<sup>2</sup>. The demand must comply with any requirements imposed by the contract of guarantee as to the form and manner of the demand<sup>3</sup>. Subject to those requirements, and to any particular requirements of the general law<sup>4</sup>, it seems that a valid demand under a guarantee can be made orally<sup>5</sup>. It is sufficient that the demand makes clear to the guarantor that the creditor requires to be paid a sum which is, in fact, due<sup>6</sup>.

Where there is no express or implied<sup>7</sup> requirement in the guarantee for a demand, and no circumstances rendering a demand upon him a legal obligation<sup>8</sup>, the guarantor is liable without being requested to pay<sup>9</sup>.

1 Whether a demand is necessary in any given case is, essentially, a question of construction of the contract: MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) [1993] Ch 425 at 447, sub nom MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) (No 2) [1993] 3 All ER 769 at 785, CA, per Dillon LJ. A guarantor may waive the contractual requirement for a written demand and then seek a contribution from his co-guarantor for any payment made to the creditor: Stimpson v Smith [1999] Ch 340, [1999] 2 All ER 833, CA.

This principle may not apply where the guarantee contains a clause making the guarantor liable as if he were a principal debtor:

Esso Petroleum Co Ltd v Alstonbridge Properties Ltd at 366-367 and at 1483 per Walton J; MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) [1993] Ch 425, sub nom MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) (No 2) [1993] 3 All ER 769, CA; and cf Tate v Crewdson [1938] Ch 869, [1938] 3 All ER 43. See also Frans Maas (UK) Ltd v Habib Bank AG Zurich [2000] All ER (D) 1152 (a performance guarantee case; held that as a matter of construction, the words 'we claim the sum of £500,000, P having failed to meet their contractual obligations to us' did not comply with the requirement of the guarantee that the claims should state that the principals had failed to pay under their contractual obligation, since the key concept underlying the wording of the guarantee was a 'failure to pay'; accordingly, P had not made a valid demand under the guarantee). As to performance guarantees see PARA 1271 et seq.

4 Eg under the Law of Property Act 1925 ss 103(i), 196 (see MORTGAGE vol 77 (2010) PARAS 453, 454), the Consumer Credit Act 1974 (see PARA 1104), or the Insolvency Act 1986 s 123(1)(a) (see COMPANY AND PARTNERSHIP INSOLVENCY vol 7(3) (2004 Reissue) PARA 446) or s 268(1)(a) (see BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARAS 127, 154 et seq).

5 The English courts (see Re a Company [1985] BCLC 37 at 41; Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA v Blattner (20 November 1986, unreported), CA) have accepted as 'a fair, working definition' of a valid demand the formulation proffered by Walker J in the Australian case Re Colonial Finance, Mortgage, Investment and Guarantee Corp Ltd (1905) 6 SRNSW 6 at 9: 'There must be a clear intimation that payment is required to constitute a demand; nothing more is necessary, and the word 'demand' need not be used; neither is the validity of a demand lessened by its being clothed in the language of politeness; it must be of a peremptory character and unconditional, but the nature of the language is immaterial provided it has this effect'.

6 NRG Vision Ltd v Churchfield Leasing Ltd [1988] BCLC 624, 4 BCC 56. A minor error in the amount demanded will not generally invalidate a demand: see Deverges v Sandeman, Clark & Co [1902] 1 Ch 579; Stubbs v Slater [1910] 1 Ch 632, CA. However, it is less clear whether a material over-statement of the amount due will do so. In Dow Banking Corp v Mahnahk Spinning and Weaving Corp and Bank Mellat [1983] 2 Lloyd's Rep 561 at 566, Lloyd J held that, in order to give the contract of guarantee business efficacy, it was necessary to imply a term that the demand should state clearly what the guarantor was required to pay. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/B. WHEN GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY ARISES/1106. Conditions precedent to guarantor's liability.

1106. Conditions precedent to guarantor's liability.

Any express or implied conditions precedent to the guarantor's liability must be fulfilled before recourse can be had to him<sup>1</sup>.

Where a guarantee recited that the loan to the principal debtor was secured by a charge upon shares, which was also mentioned in the operative part of the guarantee, the existence of the security was held to constitute a condition precedent to the guarantor's liability, and the guarantor was held not to be estopped by the recital from asserting the non-existence of the shares, since the recital was intended as a statement by the creditor and not by him<sup>2</sup>.

Where a guarantor agrees to give a guarantee on condition that other named persons also sign the guarantee as co-guarantors, the guarantor will not be liable if any of those persons do not sign, or if the signature of any of those persons is forged<sup>3</sup>. It is the creditor's duty to see that the guarantee is executed by the proper parties, and the known insolvency of one of the named co-guarantors will not dispense with the duty of obtaining his signature to the guarantee<sup>4</sup>.

Similarly, where a guarantor stipulates that the principal debtor is to execute a particular instrument, this will be regarded as a condition precedent requiring fulfilment<sup>5</sup>. In such a case, however, the guarantor will not be discharged from liability if the principal debtor, although he has not executed the guarantee bond, has executed an instrument on which the guarantor may sue him and become his specialty creditor<sup>6</sup>.

The mere fact that the taking of other security is intended or contemplated by the creditor will not make the taking of that security a condition precedent to the guarantor's liability, unless the guarantor makes the fact that his guarantee is so conditional clear to the creditor before he gives it, or there are other exceptional circumstances<sup>7</sup>. The guarantor will not be relieved from liability simply because persons he merely thought or assumed would also sign the guarantee have not done so, or further security that he merely thought or assumed would be taken has not been taken<sup>8</sup>.

1107. Effect of particular stipulations.

Where the guarantor stipulates for forbearance for a stated time to sue or enforce payment from the principal debtor, the stipulation must be exactly fulfilled or the guarantor will not be liable<sup>1</sup>. Similarly, a stipulation that goods are to be supplied or advances made to the principal debtor must be fulfilled, as being a condition precedent to the guarantor's liability<sup>2</sup>.

A guarantor who agrees to pay the creditor within a stated period after the receipt by the principal debtor of a written notice demanding payment from him is nevertheless discharged from liability where the giving of that notice is no longer possible owing to the death of the principal debtor<sup>3</sup>.

A guarantor for payment of a promissory note across which words are written making it payable at a particular place is liable even though presentation is not made at that place, because, to be effectual, such words should be in the body of the note<sup>4</sup>. Failure by an employer to comply with statutory directions in his dealings with an employee will not necessarily discharge the employee's guarantor where such directions are not clearly imperative but are merely permissive<sup>5</sup>.

Notice by or on behalf of the creditor should be given to the guarantor of the waiver by the creditor of any stipulation, introduced for his benefit, the non-fulfilment of which would have discharged the guarantor<sup>6</sup>.

In the case of a guarantee for the good behaviour of another in an office or employment, the guarantor's liability does not commence until the principal debtor has been legally appointed to the office or employment<sup>7</sup>.

1 See Rolt v Cozens (1856) 18 CB 673. Cf Board v Hoey (1948) 65 TLR 43; and see PARA 1084 note 13. It has, however, been held in Scotland that where a guarantee stipulates that no payment of the principal sum to which it relates is to be demanded before a certain date, breach of this stipulation does not discharge the guarantor: see London and Midland Bank Ltd v Forrest (1899) 2 F 179, Ct of Sess. ### C. DURATION OF GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY

1108. Duration of a guarantee.

The duration<sup>1</sup> of the guarantor's liability depends upon the terms of the guarantee<sup>2</sup>. Some guarantees are intended to cover a single credit or transaction only<sup>3</sup>, while others, called 'continuing guarantees'<sup>4</sup>, are framed so as to apply to a series of credits or transactions. In the case of a single credit or transaction the guarantor's liability extends only to the one credit or transaction agreed upon, while in the case of a continuing guarantee the liability endures until the credits or transactions contemplated by the parties and covered by the guarantee have been exhausted or until the guarantee itself has been revoked<sup>5</sup>.

As the language of guarantees and their subject matter and the surrounding circumstances differ in almost every case, the question whether a guarantee is continuing or not cannot be determined by any hard and fast rule<sup>6</sup>. It is in each case a question of construction of the guarantee in its context<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to when time begins to run in favour of a guarantor see PARAS 1103 et seq, 1181: and see generally LIMITATION PERIODS.

2 Thus, where a bond on the face of it appears to be a simple money bond to secure a sum certain with interest, it must be construed, so far at least as regards the guarantor, as given to secure the debt then existing, and not a floating balance: Walker v Hardman (1837) 4 Cl & Fin 258, HL; Re Medewe's Trust (1859) 26 Beav 588. On the other hand, a guarantee given to secure 'whatever may be owing' up to the pecuniary limit of the guarantor's prescribed liability applies, prima facie at least, not to a specific and ascertained sum already due to the creditor from the principal debtor at the date of the guarantee, but to what may afterwards become due: Wood v Priestner (1866) LR 2 Exch 66; affd (1867) LR 2 Exch 282, Ex Ch. The words 'whatever may be owing' are, apparently, descriptive not so much of a present debt as of something to become due hereafter: Wood v Priestner (1866) LR 2 Exch 66. See also Kirby v Duke of Marlborough (1813) 2 M & S 18.

3 If a party means to be guarantor only for a single dealing he should take care to say so: Merle v Wells (1810) 2 Camp 413 at 414 per Lord Ellenborough.

4 As to the meaning of 'continuing guarantee' see PARA 1013. In the case of a guarantee to cover advances, the effect of the word 'continuing' is to extend the guarantee beyond the original advance to subsequent advances: Parr's Banking Co Ltd v Yates [1898] 2 QB 460 at 466, CA, per Rigby LJ. See also Re Quest Cae Ltd [1985] BCLC 266 at 270 per Nourse J.

1109. Mercantile or trade guarantees.

Mercantile or trade guarantees are usually given either to secure the supply of goods on credit or advances of money, and, so far as the guarantor's liability is concerned, may be limited in amount<sup>1</sup> or absolutely unlimited<sup>2</sup>. Where there is a prescribed pecuniary limit, the guarantee, if continuing, is not exhausted by the first advance or credit equal to the prescribed amount<sup>3</sup>, but a guarantee, although continuing and limited to a certain given sum, may, and sometimes does, stipulate that the guarantor is only to be liable for a definite period of time and no longer<sup>4</sup>, in which case, as where it is given as security for the acceptor of bills, it is often a nice question of construction whether it covers transactions completed, but not matured, during the time limit<sup>5</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/C. DURATION OF GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY/1110. Framing non-continuing guarantees.

1110. Framing non-continuing guarantees.

Whatever is the nature of the guarantee, if it is intended to limit its scope and operation to a single transaction, great care should be taken in framing it<sup>1</sup>, and in the avoidance of words consistent with or more suitable to an intention on the part of the guarantor to extend his responsibility to several transactions rather than to limit it to one transaction only<sup>2</sup>.

A continuing guarantee will normally be appropriate as security for an overdraft facility, since the overdraft will fluctuate in amount and will often continue for an indefinite period. Guarantees for bank overdrafts usually state in terms that they are to be by way of continuing security, and that they are not to be satisfied, discharged or affected by any intermediate payment or settlement of account<sup>3</sup>. The fact that a guarantee is a continuing one may sometimes be implied from a statement that the guarantor is to be liable for the ultimate balance<sup>4</sup>.

As to mortgages to secure bank loans see Hopkinson v Rolt (1861) 9 HL Cas 514; Bradford Banking Co Ltd v Briggs & Co Ltd (1866) 12 App Cas 29, HL; Bank of Africa Ltd v Salisbury Gold Mining Co [1892] AC 281, PC; Burgess v Eve (1872) LR 13 Eq 450 at 459 per Malins V-C.

3 Without this provision it might be argued that by virtue of the operation of the rule in Devaynes v Noble, Clayton's Case (1816) 1 Mer 529, 572 (sometimes referred to simply as Clayton's Case; see also Deeley v Lloyds Bank Ltd [1912] AC 756, HL), under which credits to the account are to be treated as appropriated to the earliest debits, the obligation secured no longer exists once sufficient credits have been paid into the account to repay the original borrowing, and that subsequent debits though not increasing the overdraft were new borrowings not covered by the guarantee: see Re Quest Cae Ltd [1985] BCLC 266 at 270 per Nourse J.

4 Cf Wright v New Zealand Farmers' Co-operative Association of Canterbury Ltd [1939] AC 439, [1939] 2 All ER 701, PC. The argument sometimes put forward by guarantors, that until all other recoveries have been completed there can be no ultimate balance, and so nothing for the guarantee to bite on, is misconceived.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/C. DURATION OF GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY/1111. Fidelity guarantees.

1111. Fidelity guarantees.

Continuing guarantees given for the fidelity of a person in some office or employment have often given rise to difficult questions as to the duration of the guarantor's liability<sup>1</sup>.

Where there is nothing to control the general and indefinite language of the condition of a fidelity bond, and it does not appear from any recital in it or in any other way that the office or employment for the due discharge of which the bond has been given is limited in duration, the liability of the guarantor is co-extensive in duration with that of the employee<sup>2</sup>.

1 Where a fidelity bond is given as part of the consideration for the appointment of the principal debtor to an office or employment, it should, in the guarantor's interest, expressly stipulate that the bond is to be determinable by notice or by the guarantor's death: Re Crace, Balfour v Crace [1902] 1 Ch 733; Gordon v Calvert (1828) 4 Russ 581.

Where the office is for a specific time only, the guarantor's liability is confined to that specific time (see Kitson v Julian (1855) 4 E & B 854; Bamford v Iles and Neale (1849) 3 Exch 380; Hassell v Long (1814) 2 M & S 363; Wardens of St Saviour's, Southwark v Bostock (1806) 2 Bos & PNR 175) unless the fidelity bond contains apt words extending his liability to subsequent reappointments (Peppin v Cooper (1819) 2 B & Ald 431; Augero v Keen (1836) 1 M & W 390; and see also Dartmouth Corp v Silly (1857) 7 E & B 97; Oswald v Berwick-upon-Tweed Corp (1856) 5 HL Cas 856; Portsea Island Union Guardians v Whillier (1860) 6 Jur NS 887).

It sometimes happens that, while the condition of the bond is general and indefinite as to the time during which the guarantor is to remain liable for the employee, the recital shows that the employee's appointment to the office in question is for a specific time only. In such cases the condition is controlled by the recital and the guarantor's liability restricted to that specific time (Lord Arlington v Merricke (1672) 2 Saund 403; Liverpool Waterworks Co v Atkinson (1805) 6 East 507), whether the recital specifies in so many words the length of the term of office (Lord Arlington v Merricke above; Liverpool Waterworks Co v Atkinson above) or merely states that the appointment was made under some statute by which the office is expressly limited to a specified period (Peppin v Cooper above). However, this is not so when a statute is indefinite as to the period of duration of the appointment (Curling v Chalklen (1815) 3 M & S 502).

Even where the guarantor may have consented to the employee's reappointment, he is apparently only liable for defaults committed during the period for which the original appointment was made: Kitson v Julian (1855) 4 E & B 854; and see Williams v Jones (1729) Bunb 275.

Owing to delay in getting guarantee bonds passed in the head office of an English company in London it has happened that where the bond of an English guarantee company is accepted in Scotland, the time prescribed for finding security expires before the bond can be obtained. Accordingly, in Cuthbertson v Macdougall (1905) 13 SLT 205, Ct of Sess (OH), the Lord Ordinary directed a bond of a Scottish guarantee company to be substituted for that of an English company.

Fidelity guarantees are now rarely encountered: see further PARA 1133.

2 See Birmingham Corp v Wright (1851) 16 QB 623; Sansom v Bell (1809) 2 Camp 39; Curling v Chalklen (1815) 3 M & S 502.

See also Tullamore UDC v Robins (1913) 48 ILT 180, where the guarantor was held liable for defalcations committed before the date of the bond and failure after the date of the bond to account at audit. A bond conditioned for the due accounting by a collector of church and poor rates to the obligees 'and their successors', who were churchwardens and overseers, was held not to extend beyond their year of office, as the collector's appointment was only for such period (Leadley v Evans (1824) 2 Bing 32), although, apparently, had the collector's appointment been for a longer period than that of the obligees, the guarantors would have remained liable to 'the successors' of the original obligees (M'Gahey v Alston (1836) 1 M & W 386).

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/C. DURATION OF GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY/1112. Principal's appointment to new office.

1112. Principal's appointment to new office.

Where the principal debtor for whom a fidelity guarantee has been given is subsequently appointed to a new office, and his original appointment is thereby terminated, the guarantor, unless the guarantee provides to the contrary, ceases to be liable, even though the second appointment does not involve additional or different duties from those originally imposed<sup>1</sup>. The guarantor is also freed from further liability under a fidelity guarantee where the old and new appointments of the principal debtor are so incompatible that acceptance of the new appointment necessarily vacates the old one<sup>2</sup>. However, the mere acceptance by the principal debtor of an incompatible office will not have this effect in a case where he cannot divest himself of his original office by his own act, but requires the concurrence of another authority to his resignation, that authority not being privy or consenting to the second appointment<sup>3</sup>. So where the second appointment does not operate as an implied resignation from the old office because the authority making the second appointment cannot remove the principal debtor from his original office or accept a surrender of it, the guarantor continues liable<sup>4</sup>.

Where the new office or employment is not incompatible with the original one, so that the old appointment does not terminate, the guarantor is not discharged<sup>5</sup>.

2 Frank v Edwards (1852) 8 Exch 214; Anderson v Thornton (1842) 3 QB 271; and see R v Pateman (1788) 2 Term Rep 777; Milward v Thatcher (1787) 2 Term Rep 81. As to incompatible offices see generally CORPORATIONS vol 9(2) (2006 Reissue) PARA 1170.

5 See Frank v Edwards (1852) 8 Exch 214; Anderson v Thornton (1842) 3 QB 271. Thus, where a person becomes guarantor for a clerk in a bank, who is afterwards appointed manager of the bank, the guarantor will not be relieved from liability unless it is proved that when the principal became manager he ceased to be a clerk: Anderson v Thornton.

1113. Change in tenure of appointment.

The conversion of the office filled by the principal debtor from an annual office into one during pleasure will determine the guarantor's liability<sup>1</sup> unless the guarantee provides to the contrary<sup>2</sup>. On the other hand, where one of the terms of a contract of service makes it determinable by one month's notice on either side, and afterwards, without the guarantor's knowledge, it is agreed that the service is to be terminable by three months' notice, the guarantor is not discharged where he has not chosen to make that term part of his own contract<sup>3</sup>.

1114. Change in duties of office.

Any material alteration in the duties of the office of the principal debtor, whether effected by statute<sup>1</sup> or otherwise, will discharge the guarantor under a fidelity guarantee<sup>2</sup>. Where, however, the duties are not materially altered, but lessened, the guarantor's liability continues, even though the salary is reduced as well, unless the guarantee otherwise specifies<sup>3</sup>. Where the guarantor has guaranteed the fidelity of a person holding two offices, one of which is subsequently altered while the other is not, his guarantee still applies to the unaltered office<sup>4</sup>, although, in general, any alteration in the contract between the creditor and the principal debtor to which the guarantor has not consented will discharge the guarantor unless it is evident, without inquiry, that the alteration is insubstantial, or that it cannot but be beneficial to the guarantor<sup>5</sup>.

The sub-division of the original office in respect of which a fidelity guarantee has been given, when coupled with an alteration in the amount and character of the remuneration will terminate the guarantor's liability<sup>6</sup>.

1115. Change of salary.

Whether a reduction or increase of the principal debtor's salary or an alteration in the mode of its payment will relieve the guarantor from liability depends upon the construction of the guarantee<sup>1</sup>. If, however, the amount of the salary is to be treated as an essential ingredient in the contract, care must be taken by the guarantor to have a stipulation on the subject introduced into the guarantee or condition of the fidelity bond, as otherwise the alteration will not affect his liability<sup>2</sup>.

Where the principal debtor's appointment contemplated by the guarantee is not made at all, but another appointment is made at a higher salary, the guarantor will not be bound<sup>1</sup>. Moreover, when the original appointment is for an indefinite time, and the guarantor has agreed to be liable so long as the debtor continues in office, the subsequent reappointment of the principal debtor at a different salary will, unless the guarantee provides otherwise, revoke the original appointment and terminate the guarantor's liability<sup>2</sup>.

1118. Increase in number of obligees.

Whether the guarantor's liability will continue after an increase has taken place in the number of the persons to whom the guarantee was originally given is largely a question of intention, ascertainable by reference to the terms of the guarantee<sup>1</sup> and to its subject matter<sup>2</sup>. This intention should, however, be clearly expressed, if effect is to be given to it<sup>3</sup>, and the mere use of language indicating that the guarantee is given to certain individuals in their capacity as partners in a 'firm' or 'house' will not suffice for the purpose<sup>4</sup>.

So it has been held that a guarantee given to one person for the fidelity of another ceases to operate after the first person has taken a third party into partnership with him<sup>5</sup>; and that securities given to a banking firm for a current balance do not cover transactions subsequent to the admission of a new partner<sup>6</sup>.

1119. Decrease in number of obligees.

The death of a member of the firm to which a guarantee is given will generally discharge the guarantor<sup>1</sup>, even though the guarantee is given for a fixed time which has not expired when the death occurs<sup>2</sup>, unless a contrary intention is indicated by the guarantee<sup>3</sup>. A bond given by a guarantor for repayment of such sums as may be advanced to meet bills drawn by two persons in partnership or either of them does not extend to bills drawn by one of those persons after the death of the other<sup>4</sup>. A bond conditioned for faithful service of the principal to the obligee and his executors does not make the guarantor liable for defaults committed by the principal, after the obligee's death, when in the service of the executors who continue the business and retain him in their employment<sup>5</sup>. The retirement of a partner from the firm to which a guarantee has been given will determine the guarantor's liability as to future transactions under it<sup>6</sup> in the absence of any expression of intention to the contrary contained in the guarantee<sup>7</sup>. Unless such an intention is indicated, the retirement from the firm of a partner for whose fidelity the guarantor has made himself liable will determine the guarantor's future liability, even where the guarantee contemplates its continuance after that partner's death<sup>8</sup>.

A guarantor for the fidelity of an agent is not liable after the agency has been entrusted by the employers to a new firm comprising that agent<sup>1</sup>, even where the guarantor had knowledge, before he executed the fidelity bond, that the agent intended to enter into the partnership after the execution of the fidelity bond<sup>2</sup>; although where on the true construction of the contract it appears that the guarantor agrees to remain liable after the principal has taken another into partnership with him, the guarantee will continue applicable to future transactions<sup>3</sup>.

D. ENFORCEMENT OF GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY

1121. Remedy against guarantor.

The remedy against a solvent<sup>1</sup> guarantor on his guarantee is by bringing a claim in the High Court or in a county court<sup>2</sup>. In both courts procedure exists by which the creditor may in a proper case recover final judgment against the guarantor in a summary manner<sup>3</sup>.

It is an abuse of process to present a winding-up petition against a solvent guarantor company as a means of putting pressure on it to pay money which is bona fide disputed, instead of applying for summary judgment<sup>4</sup>.

1 As to the effect of bankruptcy on a guarantee see BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARAS 490, 504 et seq. The guarantor for an account should be joined to the proceedings where the trustee in bankruptcy seeks to show that payments by the debtor to the person with whom he was in account are voidable as a transaction at an undervalue or a preference: Re Idenden (a bankrupt), ex p Trustee of the Property of the Bankrupt v Bateman & Co Ltd [1970] 2 All ER 387n, [1970] 1 WLR 1015; and see BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARA 653 et seq.

2 A county court now has unlimited jurisdiction to hear and determine any claim founded on contract: see the County Courts Act 1984 s 15(1) (amended by SI 1991/724); and COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARA 712. For the limited exceptions (which do not affect guarantees) see the County Courts Act 1984 s 15(2); and COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARA 722. The remedy of the creditor against the guarantor may be barred by the running of time: see PARA 1180.

3 As to summary judgment see CPR Pt 24; and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 524 et seq. For examples of cases concerning the principles applicable to applications for summary judgment involving claims under a guarantee see eg Lloyds Bank plc v Ellis-Fewster [1983] 2 All ER 424, [1983] 1 WLR 559, CA; Banque de Paris et des Pays-Bas (Suisse) SA v de Naray [1984] 1 Lloyd's Rep 21, CA; Morgan Guaranty Trust Co v Hadjantonakis (No 2) [1988] 1 Lloyd's Rep 375; Den Norske Creditbank v Sarawak Economic Development Corp [1988] 2 Lloyd's Rep 616; affd [1989] 2 Lloyd's Rep 35, CA; Standard Chartered Bank Ltd v Yaacoub [1990] CA Transcript 699; National Westminster Bank plc v Daniel [1994] 1 All ER 156, [1993] 1 WLR 1453, CA. Conversely, many authorities concerning the law of guarantees have been decided on applications for summary judgment: see eg Hyundai Shipbuilding and Heavy Industries Co Ltd v Pournaras [1978] 2 Lloyd's Rep 502, CA; Hyundai Heavy Industries Co v Papadopoulos [1979] 1 Lloyd's Rep 130, CA; affd [1980] 2 All ER 29, [1980] 1 WLR 1129, [1980] 2 Lloyd's Rep 1, HL; Dow Banking Corp v Mahnakh Spinning and Weaving Corp and Bank Mellat [1983] 2 Lloyd's Rep 561; Byblos Bank SAL v Al-Khudairy [1987] BCLC 232, CA.

1122. Joinder of parties.

Where a guarantee is given to two or more creditors jointly<sup>1</sup>, each of them if solvent<sup>2</sup> must, unless the court gives leave to the contrary, be a party to any claim on the guarantee<sup>3</sup>. If it is given to them severally, any one of them, or the personal representative of any one of them, may sue upon it by himself<sup>4</sup>, although all may join as claimants<sup>5</sup>. The court's permission is, however, required to add a party, unless the claim form has not been served<sup>6</sup>.

A claim may be maintained by the several partners of a firm upon a guarantee given to one of them, if it was given for the benefit of all<sup>7</sup>, and especially if the partner to whom the guarantee was addressed did not carry on any separate business to which the guarantee could relate<sup>8</sup>; but where a guarantee is given to one member of a firm personally, in consideration of his undertaking not to sue certain debtors of the firm, he must sue on the guarantee alone without joining his partners as co-claimants<sup>9</sup>.

A claim may be maintained upon a bond, expressed to be payable to a firm, by the persons who constituted the firm when the bond was executed<sup>10</sup>.

1 By statute, a covenant or obligation under seal made after 1925 (or, as from 31 July 1990, executed as a deed) with two or more persons jointly is construed, in the absence of the expression of a contrary intention, as being also made with each of them: see the Law of Property Act 1925 s 81(1), (5) (s 81(5) added by the Law of Property (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1989 Sch 1 para 5). Apart from statute, where a guarantee is given to more persons than one it is a question of construction whether it is given to them jointly or severally. A joint security will not be construed to be joint and several even though one of the parties to it is a guarantor: Jones v Beach (1852) 2 De GM & G 886 at 888, doubting Thorpe v Jackson (1837) 2 Y & C Ex 553, contra. There is no principle of equity that a joint covenant or promise is to be treated as joint and several: see Sumner v Powell (1816) 2 Mer 30; affd (1823) Turn & R 423; Other v Iveson (1855) 3 Drew 177; Kendall v Hamilton (1879) 4 App Cas 504, HL. See CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 1083; DEEDS AND OTHER INSTRUMENTS vol 13 (2007 Reissue) PARAS 116, 265.

2 Where one of two or more joint contractors is bankrupt, the other or others may sue or be sued in respect of that contract without the joinder of the bankrupt: Insolvency Act 1986 s 345(4); and see BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARA 677.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/D. ENFORCEMENT OF GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY/1124. Who may enforce guarantee.

1124. Who may enforce guarantee.

A guarantee which is not addressed to anyone may be enforced by the party to whom or for whose benefit it was given, if accepted by him in writing signed by him<sup>1</sup>.

A person who is not a party to a guarantee or indemnity or fidelity bond of guarantee may sometimes sue on it as being entitled to the benefit of it<sup>2</sup>. To entitle him to sue either of the contracting parties he must possess an actual beneficial right which places him in the position of beneficiary under the contract<sup>3</sup>.

Subject to any contractual restrictions contained within the guarantee itself, the person to whom a guarantee is given may assign the guaranteed debt and the securities for the debt<sup>4</sup>. Where he does so, the assignee acquires all the rights of the assignor<sup>5</sup>, including the right to sue in his own name on the guarantee<sup>6</sup>. It is not necessary, although it may be prudent, for the creditor to give notice to the guarantor of the assignment of a guarantee<sup>7</sup>. However, unless and until such notice is given, the creditor cannot recover the amount due under the guarantee in a claim to which the assignor is not a party<sup>8</sup>. In the context of an all-moneys guarantee of present and future debts, it will be a question of construction as to whether an assignment of the guarantee entitles the assignee to claim under the guarantee in respect of advances made by him (and not by the assignor) to the principal debtor after the date of the assignment<sup>9</sup>.

The ruling in Walton v Dodson (1827) 3 C & P 162 seems to suggest that such a guarantee is enforceable even if not so accepted in writing, but it is difficult to reconcile this ruling with those cases (see PARA 1071) which decide that to satisfy the Statute of Frauds (1677) s 4 (see PARA 1052), the contracting parties must be named or sufficiently described in writing.

<sup>2</sup> See Kenney v Employers' Liability Assurance Corp'n [1901] 1 IR 301, CA (action by mortgagees as obligees and mortgagor as person entitled to equity of proceeds of mortgage security where bond given by defendant for due discharge of his duties by a fraudulent receiver appointed by mortgagees). In Re Stratton, ex p Salting (1883) 25 ChD 148, CA, a third person whose securities had been fraudulently pledged to a bank for a debt of a partnership firm was held entitled pro tanto to the benefit of a guarantee for payment to the bank of the partnership debt given by a member of the firm who was innocent of the fraudulent pledge.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/D. ENFORCEMENT OF GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY/1125. Defendants to claim on guarantee.

1125. Defendants to claim on guarantee.

The claimant may join as defendants to a claim on a guarantee all or any of the persons liable under it<sup>1</sup>, whether their liability is joint, joint and several or several<sup>2</sup>. The principal debtor and the guarantor may be sued in the same claim<sup>3</sup>. There is, in general, no need for the creditor to sue or arbitrate against the principal debtor, even if the principal debtor is solvent<sup>4</sup>; but the court may order a person to be added as a new party if it is desirable to add the new party so that the court can resolve all the matters in dispute in the proceedings or there is an issue involving the new party and an existing party which is connected to the matters in dispute in the proceedings, and it is desirable to add the new party so that the court can resolve that issue<sup>5</sup>.

1 The court's permission is required to remove, add or substitute a party, unless the claim form has not been served: see CPR 19.4(1); and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 214.

2 Prior to the enactment of the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978 s 3, judgment against one of two joint contractors, even though unsatisfied, released the others from liability: King v Hoare (1844) 13 M & W 494; Kendall v Hamilton (1879) 4 App Cas 504, HL. Judgment recovered against any person liable in respect of any debt or damage is not now a bar to a claim, or to the continuance of a claim, against any other person who is (apart from any such bar) jointly liable with him in respect of the same debt or damage: see the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978 s 3. Thus the claimant may now choose which of the joint contractors he wishes to sue, and need not join and cannot be compelled to join the other joint contractors. If the defendant wishes to claim contribution from co-guarantors who have not been made defendants, he must himself join them as third parties. Cases (such as Cockburn v Thompson (1809) 16 Ves 321 at 326; Madox v Jackson (1746) 3 Atk 405; Fell v Goslin (1852) 7 Exch 185; Collins v Prosser (1823) 1 B & C 682; Ellis v Emmanuel (1876) 1 ExD 157, CA; Armstrong v Cahill (1880) 6 LR 440) holding that all joint guarantors must be joined in a claim to recover the aggregate due from them are no longer good law.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(2) LIABILITY OF GUARANTOR/(ii) Extent of Guarantor's Liability/D. ENFORCEMENT OF GUARANTOR'S LIABILITY/1126. Set-off.

1126. Set-off.

In an appropriate case, a guarantor who has a money claim against the creditor may be able to rely upon that claim<sup>1</sup> as a total or partial defence by way of set-off to the creditor's claim under the guarantee. Similarly, in an appropriate case, the creditor may set up his claim under the guarantee as a defence to a money claim against him by the guarantor<sup>2</sup>.

Where all parties are solvent<sup>3</sup>, these defences are only available where both liabilities are presently payable. In the absence of agreement, the creditor may not set off the guarantor's contingent liability under the guarantee in reduction of the creditor's present debts or other money obligations to the guarantor<sup>4</sup>.

The right of set-off may be excluded by the terms of the contract of guarantee<sup>5</sup>.

Where the creditor or the guarantor is insolvent, the right of set-off is statutory<sup>6</sup>. Parties may not increase<sup>7</sup> or diminish<sup>8</sup> by contract the extent of the rights of set-off conferred in bankruptcy and liquidation. Where demand has been made under the guarantee prior to the insolvency, or the guarantee contains a principal debtor clause by virtue of which the guarantor is liable without demand<sup>9</sup>, the statutory set-off takes effect automatically<sup>10</sup>.

Where the guarantor's liability to the creditor is reduced by virtue of a set-off, that reduction also automatically reduces the liability of the principal debtor to the creditor<sup>11</sup>.

1 For the extent of the guarantor's entitlement to rely upon rights of set-off available to the principal debtor see PARA 1135.

2 A claim under a guarantee (which is properly regarded as a liability to the creditor for unliquidated damages: see Moschi v Lep Air Services Ltd [1973] AC 331 at 348-349, [1972] 2 All ER 393 at 401-402, HL, per Lord Diplock, and at 357 and 409 per Lord Simon of Glaisdale) cannot form the subject of a legal set-off until the amount of the liability in respect of which the guarantee was given has been established: Axel Johnson Petroleum AB v MG Mineral Group AG, The Jo Lind [1992] 2 All ER 163 at 166, [1992] 1 WLR 270 at 272, CA, per Leggatt LJ; Crawford v Stirling (1802) 4 Esp 207; Morley v Inglis (1837) 4 Bing NC 58. However, if the amount of that liability has been established (eg because the underlying obligation is a debt), so that the amount claimed against the guarantor is 'capable of being liquidated or ascertained with precision at the time of pleading' (Morley v Inglis (1837) 4 Bing NC 58 at 71 per Tindal CJ), it may form the subject of a set-off at law: Axel Johnson Petroleum AB v MG Mineral Group AG above; Banco Central SA and Trevelan Navigation Inc v Lingoss & Falce Ltd and BFI Line Ltd, The Raven [1980] 2 Lloyd's Rep 266. Where the claims are not for liquidated sums, they may nevertheless be the subject of an equitable set-off if they are sufficiently connected to make it inequitable to insist upon the one claim without taking the other into account: The Raven; Axel Johnson Petroleum AB v MG Mineral Group AG above; and see Hanak v Green [1958] 2 QB 9, [1958] 2 All ER 141, CA; Federal Commerce and Navigation Co Ltd v Molena Alpha Inc [1978] QB 927, [1978] 3 All ER 1066, CA; affd in part on a different point [1979] AC 757, [1979] 1 All ER 307, HL; Dole Dried Fruit and Nut Co v Trustin Kerwood Ltd [1990] 2 Lloyd's Rep 309, CA. However, where the guarantor deals as consumer or the guarantee is in the creditor's standard form, provisions excluding the right of set-off must satisfy the requirement of reasonableness imposed by the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977 in order to be effective: cf Stewart Gill Ltd v Horatio Myer & Co Ltd [1992] QB 600, [1992] 2 All ER 357, CA. See also Quadrant Visual Communications Ltd v Hutchison Telephone (UK) Ltd [1993] BCLC 442, CA. discharges the principal debtor's obligation<sup>2</sup>. It is not, therefore, the law that the guarantor has no rights until he pays the guaranteed debt<sup>3</sup>.

1130. Arrangements between debtors.

A person who executes an instrument or enters into an agreement as guarantor for another will have some of the rights and liabilities of a guarantor, even though the instrument or agreement makes him liable as principal debtor to the creditor and even though the instrument or agreement is a deed<sup>1</sup>. Similarly, where it is agreed between two or more principal co-debtors that the liability of one is to be secondary to that of the others, that one will have some of the rights and liabilities of a guarantor<sup>2</sup>.

Those rights and liabilities will exist between the person primarily liable and the person whose liability is agreed to be secondary from the time that the agreement between them is made<sup>3</sup>. The creditor, however, may treat both as principal debtors unless and until he has notice of the arrangement<sup>4</sup>. Once the creditor becomes aware of the arrangement, he is obliged to respect the rights of the co-debtor who has assumed the position of guarantor<sup>5</sup>. It is not necessary that the principal debtor should consent to the arrangement, only that he should have notice of it, for the guarantor's rights in these circumstances are rights which arise in equity and not from contract, and depend upon notice<sup>6</sup>.

At law this rule was confined to instruments not under seal. Before the introduction of equitable pleas by the Common Law Procedure Act 1854 ss 83-86 (repealed), oral evidence was inadmissible at law to prove that one of several persons, jointly and severally bound, was, in fact, only a surety and entitled to be so treated by the creditor. However, in equity such evidence was always admitted in proof of the fact: Craythorne v Swinburne (1807) 14 Ves 160 at 170-171 per Lord Eldon LC; and see Clarke v Henty (1838) 3 Y & C Ex 187. The rule in equity, which now prevails (see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 49(1); PARA 1197; and EQUITY vol 16(2) (Reissue) PARA 500) was that the creditor was bound to regard the position of the surety by notice, and not by contract, and that notice after the contract was entered into was sufficient, and this rule extended to instruments under seal: see the cases cited above and in note 2; and see Greenough v McClelland (1860) 2 E & E 429, Ex Ch; Wauthier v Wilson (1912) 28 TLR 239, CA.

1131. Whether guarantor can compel creditor to collect debt.

After the guaranteed debt has become due, and before he has been asked to pay it, the guarantor may require the creditor to call upon the principal debtor to pay off the debt<sup>1</sup>. It is doubtful, however, whether the guarantor has any right to require the creditor to do so if he has not discharged himself of his liability<sup>2</sup>. In the absence of agreement the creditor is not bound to sue the principal debtor before suing the guarantor<sup>3</sup>. Moreover the guarantor, even where he deposits the amount of the guaranteed debt, cannot without such agreement compel the creditor to proceed against the principal debtor unless he undertakes to indemnify the creditor for the risk, delay and expense which he thereby incurs<sup>4</sup>, and, apparently, satisfies him that the principal debtor is solvent<sup>5</sup>.

1132. Guarantor's right to sue principal debtor.

At any time after the debt is due the guarantor may apply to the creditor and pay him off and then, on giving a proper indemnity for costs, he may sue the principal debtor in the creditor's name<sup>1</sup>, or, apparently, in his own name, should he obtain an assignment of the guaranteed debt<sup>2</sup>. There does not, however, seem to be any reported instance in which a guarantor has in practice exercised this right, and certainly the cases in which a guarantor makes use of it must be rare<sup>3</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(3) GUARANTOR'S RIGHTS AGAINST CREDITOR/(i) Guarantor's Rights before Payment/A. GUARANTOR'S RIGHTS BEFORE DEMAND OF PAYMENT/1133. Fidelity guarantees.

1133. Fidelity guarantees.

Fidelity guarantees are now rarely encountered; and the impact of employment protection legislation on the principles set out below has not been judicially considered. The older authorities state that if, to the knowledge of a guarantor for the good behaviour of another in an employment, the employee is guilty of misconduct rendering him liable to dismissal, the guarantor may insist on the employer dismissing that employee<sup>1</sup>. Where the employer himself possesses the power of dismissal, the guarantor will be discharged from future liability on the guarantee if the employer fails to comply with the guarantor's demand for the employee's dismissal<sup>2</sup>. If misconduct by the employee during the currency of the guarantee is actually known to the employer but not to the guarantor<sup>3</sup>, and the employer without disclosing the misconduct to the guarantor<sup>4</sup> continues the employee in his employment, the guarantor will not be liable in respect of any further misconduct of the employee subsequent to the employer's discovery of the original misconduct<sup>5</sup>. The guarantor is not, however, discharged where the power of dismissal is vested in other persons who are not parties to the contract of guarantee, and who refuse to exercise it when requested to do so by the employer<sup>6</sup>.

Where an employee for whom the guarantor is answerable has to his knowledge been guilty of dishonesty or other misconduct justifying dismissal, the guarantor, for his own protection, should insist on having the guarantee or fidelity bond given up to him, for otherwise he may be taken to have consented to remain liable, notwithstanding the misconduct<sup>7</sup>.

An employer may, alternatively, protect himself against an employee's misconduct by means of fidelity insurance, which is discussed elsewhere in this work<sup>8</sup>.

1134. Equitable defences.

In any claim that may be brought against a guarantor by the creditor on the guarantee, the guarantor may set up a defence of discharge from liability on equitable grounds<sup>1</sup>.

On application made to the Chancery Division of the High Court<sup>2</sup> a guarantee may be cancelled and set aside on equitable grounds. Thus a fidelity guarantee may be ordered to be cancelled where the employee has been guilty of misconduct and the employer has refused to dismiss him or to give up the guarantee<sup>3</sup>. Any division of the High Court may give effect to an equitable defence alleging grounds for the cancellation of a guarantee<sup>4</sup>.

B. GUARANTOR'S RIGHTS ON PAYMENT BEING DEMANDED

1135. Guarantor's right to set-off and counterclaim.

On being sued by the creditor for payment of the debt guaranteed, a guarantor may rely upon any right of set-off or counterclaim which the principal debtor could set up against the creditor in reduction of the guaranteed debt in reduction of the claim against him under the guarantee<sup>1</sup>. Whenever the set-off or counterclaim relied on does not operate directly to reduce the debt guaranteed, the principal debtor should be made a party, so as to bind him and prevent him afterwards claiming payment from the creditor<sup>2</sup>.

However, the guarantor will not be entitled to rely upon the principal debtor's rights of set-off or counterclaim if the guarantee, on its true construction, requires the guarantor to pay a particular amount due irrespective of the accounting position between the principal debtor and the creditor<sup>3</sup>. Nor, where the guarantee takes the form of a legal mortgage, can the mortgagor guarantor usually resist the creditor mortgagee's claim for possession by relying upon the fact that the principal debtor has a claim for unliquidated damages by way of set-off against the creditor for an amount which exceeds the amount secured<sup>4</sup>.

The guarantor will be entitled to rely (provided all parties are solvent) upon any provision in the principal contract widening the principal debtor's right of set-off: Aurora Borealis Compania Armadora SA and Buenamar Compania Naviera SA v Marine Midland Bank NA, The Maistros [1984] 1 Lloyd's Rep 646. 2 Murphy v Glass (1869) LR 2 PC 408. Where the principal debtor's cross-claim would not provide him with a defence to the creditor's claim (as, for example, where the creditor's claim against the principal is under a bill of exchange or for charter hire or freight), it will similarly not provide the guarantor with a defence to the creditor's claim under the guarantee: Aliakmon Maritime Corp v Trans Ocean Continental Shipping Ltd, The Aliakmon Progress [1978] 2 Lloyd's Rep 499, CA.

3 Hyundai Shipbuilding and Heavy Industries Co Ltd v Pournaras [1978] 2 Lloyd's Rep 502, CA; applied in Hyundai Heavy Industries Co v Papadopoulos [1979] 1 Lloyd's Rep 130, CA; and approved [1980] 2 All ER 29, [1980] 1 WLR 1129, [1980] 2 Lloyd's Rep 1, HL. In that case the underlying contract provided that payments were not to be withheld in consequence of any dispute, and the guarantee stated that 'in case the [principal debtor] is in default of any such payment [the guarantor] will forthwith make the payment in default on behalf of the [principal debtor]'. Since the application of this principle depends upon the construction of the guarantor's obligation under the contract of guarantee, not upon any breach or unexpected performance by the creditor, it is unlikely that it could be challenged under the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(3) GUARANTOR'S RIGHTS AGAINST CREDITOR/(i) Guarantor's Rights before Payment/B. GUARANTOR'S RIGHTS ON PAYMENT BEING DEMANDED/1136. Marshalling.

1136. Marshalling.

When payment is demanded of the guarantor by the creditor, the guarantor may compel the creditor, if he has a claim upon two funds in respect of the guaranteed debt, of one only of which the guarantor can avail himself, to resort to the other first<sup>1</sup>.

A guarantor is not entitled to marshal in his favour securities held in respect of different debts or of a different part of the same debt<sup>2</sup>. Where, however, the creditor has security for a different debt from that guaranteed by the guarantor, and can consolidate that security with another held by him for the guaranteed debt, the guarantor may have the securities marshalled in his favour; thus, after the creditor has been paid in full the guarantor has a right to be reimbursed, not only out of the security for the guaranteed debt, but also, in case of any deficiency, out of the other security, and to insist, where the latter security is sufficient to cover both debts, upon having the guaranteed debt liquidated out of it<sup>3</sup>.

1138. Guarantor's right of subrogation.

As soon as the guarantor has paid to the creditor what is due to the creditor under the guarantee, he is entitled, unless he has waived them<sup>1</sup>, to be subrogated<sup>2</sup> to all the rights possessed by the creditor in respect of the debt, default or miscarriages to which the guarantee relates<sup>3</sup>.

Thus, on payment, but not before<sup>4</sup>, the guarantor has a right to the benefit of all the securities (whether known to him or not at the time he became guarantor<sup>5</sup>) which the creditor has received from the principal debtor<sup>6</sup> before, contemporaneously with or after the creation of the guarantee<sup>7</sup>, and whether or not they existed at the time the guarantee was given<sup>8</sup>. Money which by contract is appropriated to a particular purpose stands, as regards the guarantor, on the same footing as securities<sup>9</sup>. Moreover, if the creditor assigns the guaranteed debt and the securities for the debt<sup>10</sup>, the assignment is subject to the obligation to preserve the securities for the guarantor's benefit<sup>11</sup>.

Where, however, the guarantor is reimbursed under a counter-guarantee, he loses his rights of subrogation, which are transferred by operation of law to the counter-guarantor<sup>12</sup>.

1139. Origin and enforcement of right.

The guarantor's right to the creditor's securities on payment of the guaranteed debt is derived<sup>1</sup> from the obligation imposed on the principal debtor of indemnifying the surety<sup>2</sup>, which makes it inequitable for a creditor, by electing not to avail himself of the securities for the guaranteed debt, to throw the whole liability on to the guarantor<sup>3</sup>. This right, which prevents the creditor from appropriating a security for the guaranteed debt to the payment of any other debt or liability<sup>4</sup>, rests not upon contract but upon general principles of equity similar to those governing the marshalling of funds when one creditor of the same debtor may resort to either of two funds and another creditor to one only<sup>5</sup>.

If securities to which the guarantor is entitled are not voluntarily given up to him by the creditor, he may bring a claim to compel delivery<sup>6</sup>.

1 These rights of the guarantor, as developed in the authorities cited in this paragraph and PARA 1138, were recognised and enacted by the Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856 s 5: see Duncan, Fox & Co v North and South Wales Bank (1880) 6 App Cas 1 at 19, HL, per Lord Blackburn.

1140. Guarantor for a limited sum.

A guarantor for a limited sum only has, on payment of that sum, all the rights of the creditor in respect of that amount. He is entitled to share in any security held by the creditor for the whole debt<sup>1</sup>, even if that security was given without his knowledge and to secure a further debt in addition to that for which he became guarantor<sup>2</sup>. However, such a guarantor is not entitled to the benefit of a security given by the principal debtor to the creditor, without the guarantor's knowledge, at a different time and for another part of the debt to which his guarantee does not extend<sup>3</sup>.

Where two debts were due from a debtor to a creditor, and there was a guarantor for the second debt only, it was held that, as the securities lodged by the debtor with his creditor for the first debt were more than sufficient to pay it, the guarantor was entitled to the benefit of the surplus towards the liquidation of the second debt: Praed v Gardiner (1788) 2 Cox Eq Cas 86; and see Heyman v Dubois (1871) LR 13 Eq 158.

3 Wade v Coope (1827) 2 Sim 155. Thus, where a guarantee is given to a bank to secure advances to one of its customers, and subsequently successive advances are made by the bank to him, not under the guarantee, but independently of it, and against securities which on the repayment of each advance so made are returned by the bank to its customer, the guarantor, though he has not been consulted with reference to such transactions, has no valid ground of objection, and the customer is in such circumstances entitled, as against the guarantor, to retain the securities returned to him by the bank: Wilkinson v London and County Banking Co (1884) 1 TLR 63, HL.

1141. Satisfied securities.

If a guarantor for a debt or duty pays the debt or performs the duty in full<sup>1</sup>, he is entitled to have assigned to him all securities held by the creditor in respect of the debt or duty, whether or not the security is deemed at law to have been satisfied by the payment of the debt or performance of the duty<sup>2</sup>. A guarantor whose estate has been resorted to beyond what, in equity, it is bound to bear has the right to have an assignment made to him of every security which the creditor possesses against the principal debtor<sup>3</sup>, and the satisfied debt is dealt with as still subsisting to the extent to which the guarantor is improperly resorted to<sup>4</sup>.

This principle applies only where the joint liability arises out of contract. One of two joint tortfeasors who has paid the damages due under a judgment against him and his co-tortfeasor is not entitled to an assignment of the judgment to enable him to recover contribution from his co-tortfeasor<sup>5</sup>, although by statute he is entitled to contribution<sup>6</sup>.

The right to an assignment of satisfied securities may be enforced by bringing a claim<sup>7</sup>. Where the creditor has refused to assign the judgment, the guarantor may recover as damages the value of the specific assets which would have been available for execution under the judgment, if it had been duly assigned, without showing, in the first instance, that there were no other assets available<sup>8</sup>. In the case of insolvency, the right to stand in the place of a judgment creditor and to enforce that right against the insolvent estate is not affected by the circumstance that actual assignment of the judgment has not been obtained<sup>9</sup>.

When the judgment is assigned, the assignee must obtain leave to issue execution on it<sup>10</sup>. In considering whether leave ought to be given, the court may take into consideration the state of accounts between the parties entitled and liable to execution and generally their mutual rights and liabilities, legal or equitable<sup>11</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856 s 5. Section 5 abrogated the common law rule to the contrary, for which see Copis v Middleton (1823) Turn & R 224; Gammon v Stone (1749) 1 Ves Sen 339; Woffington v Sparks (1754) 2 Ves Sen 569; and see Batchellor v Lawrence (1861) 9 CBNS 543 at 552-553 per Williams J. A guarantor who has paid the debt in full is entitled to pursue all the creditor's remedies, including the use of the creditor's name, upon giving a proper indemnity, in order himself to obtain indemnity from the principal debtor or a co-guarantor, although against a co-guarantor he may recover only the proportion for which, as between themselves, the co-guarantor is liable: Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856 s 5. As to the rights of co-guarantors among themselves see Dale v Powell (1911) 105 LT 291 at 294 per Parker J; Brown v Cork [1985] BCLC 363, CA; and PARA 1175. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(3) GUARANTOR'S RIGHTS AGAINST CREDITOR/(ii) Guarantor's Rights after Payment/1142. Guarantor's right to transfer of mortgage security.

1142. Guarantor's right to transfer of mortgage security.

Where the guaranteed debt is secured by a mortgage executed by the principal debtor the guarantor is, on payment of the debt, entitled to a transfer of the mortgage<sup>1</sup>, even though he was not originally aware of its existence<sup>2</sup>. Prior to the transfer a guarantor for payment of the mortgage debt itself has, on payment of any portion of it, an equitable charge on the mortgaged property<sup>3</sup> arising automatically, which is not, however, regarded as being an interest in the mortgaged land<sup>4</sup>.

Where a mortgage debt was in fact paid out of charges created by the guarantor further to secure the mortgage debt, he was entitled to the benefit of the mortgagee's securities against the mortgagor's land, although according to the proviso for redemption in the event of the mortgagor or his guarantor repaying the mortgage debt, the mortgagee undertook to reconvey the land and charges to the uses on which they were held before the execution of the mortgage deed<sup>5</sup>. Moreover, a guarantor who mortgages his own property as collateral security for a mortgage debt secured on another property has an interest in that other property and is a necessary party to a claim for its foreclosure or redemption<sup>6</sup>.

A guarantor is entitled to redeem if he has mortgaged property of his own to secure the debt due from the principal debtor<sup>7</sup>, or if he has joined in a mortgage of the principal debtor's property so as to render himself liable to payment of principal or interest, and the principal debtor defaults<sup>8</sup>. When the guarantor redeems a mortgage by the principal debtor, he is deemed to do so for his own benefit, and is not presumed, like the mortgagor, to have done so for the benefit of subsequent incumbrancers; for the guarantor is not in privity with them, and towards them he has undertaken no obligation for the discharge of their debts<sup>9</sup>. He is therefore entitled to have the mortgage assigned to him as against them, even though their securities were created before the contract of guarantee<sup>10</sup>.

Where a claim for foreclosure is brought only one six month period is allowed for redemption for both the mortgagor and the guarantor, and not two successive six month periods<sup>11</sup>.

Some observations of Page Wood V-C in South v Bloxam (1865) 2 Hem & M 457 created a doubt whether the guarantor's right to the benefit of securities held by the creditor arises until the guarantor pays the guaranteed debt. According to subsequent decisions, however, a guarantor's right to a collateral security is not in abeyance until he is called upon to pay; Dixon v Steel [1901] 2 Ch 602; and see Lake v Brutton (1856) 8 De GM & G 440; Pledge v Buss (1860) John 663; and PARA 1129.

1143. Tacking.

Whether the right of a guarantor to a transfer of a mortgage can be postponed until he has paid off, in addition to the sum originally advanced and in respect of which he is guarantor, such further advances as may subsequently have been made<sup>1</sup>, is doubtful<sup>2</sup>. There can be no such postponement where the guarantor was wholly ignorant of the subsequent advances having been made, and such advances were not contemplated at the time of the original loan<sup>3</sup>, nor where there is a special contract excluding the right to tack a second advance to one previously made<sup>4</sup>. On the other hand, where the alleged guarantor is really a principal debtor, he cannot claim the rights of a guarantor<sup>5</sup>, and therefore the right of tacking against such a person and his personal representatives will be upheld<sup>6</sup>.

The guarantor himself is not entitled, as against a second mortgagee, to tack to the first mortgage, on its transfer to him by the creditor, the costs of unsuccessfully defending an action brought against him by the creditor on his guarantee covenant<sup>7</sup>.

1 A mortgagee's right to tack, ie to add later advances to earlier advances so as to obtain priority over an intermediate incumbrancer, has been abolished except as to further advances made (1) by arrangement with a subsequent mortgagee; (2) without notice of a subsequent mortgage at the time of making a further advance; (3) under an obligation imposed by the mortgage: see the Law of Property Act 1925 s 94(1). See generally MORTGAGE vol 77 (2010) PARAS 264, 265. The cases cited in notes 2-7, which were all decided before the enactment of the 1925 legislation, should be read with this partial abolition in mind.

2 See Williams v Owen (1843) 13 Sim 597; Nicholas v Ridley [1904] 1 Ch 192, CA. In Williams v Owen above the right to tack against a guarantor, who had joined in the covenant in the mortgage deed, was upheld on the ground that he must have known of such right and have impliedly consented to its exercise. This decision was followed in Farebrother v Wodehouse (1856) 23 Beav 18, and approved in Drew v Lockett (1863) 32 Beav 499. On the other hand, it was neither cited nor followed in Bowker v Bull (1850) 1 Sim NS 29, and was disapproved in Re Kirkwood's Estate (1878) 1 LR Ir 108; Dawson v Bank of Whitehaven (1877) 4 ChD 639; on appeal 6 ChD 218, CA; and in Forbes v Jackson (1882) 19 ChD 615, where Hall V-C laid down the principle that the guarantor in effect bargains that the securities which the creditor takes are to be for the guarantor, if and when he is called upon to make any payment, and that it is the creditor's duty to keep the securities intact, and not to give them up and burden them with further advances. See note 1.

3 Forbes v Jackson (1882) 19 ChD 615; Newton v Chorlton (1853) 10 Hare 646. Sometimes the security expressly gives to the debtor an option to call for further advances: West v Williams [1899] 1 Ch 132, CA. In these circumstances a guarantor might, as in Williams v Owen (1843) 13 Sim 597, be held to have agreed that, should the option be exercised, the right to tack might be put in force against him. See note 1.

4 Bowker v Bull (1850) 1 Sim NS 29. See note 1.

5 Duncan, Fox & Co v North and South Wales Bank (1880) 6 App Cas 1 at 11, HL, per Lord Selborne LC. See note 1.

6 Nicholas v Ridley [1904] 1 Ch 192, CA. See note 1.

7 South v Bloxam (1865) 2 Hem & M 457. In this case, which was subsequently explained in Dixon v Steel [1901] 2 Ch 602, it was also held that the doctrine of marshalling securities might be applied against a guarantor in favour of a second mortgagee: see EQUITY vol 16(2) (Reissue) PARA 759. As to the statutory abolition of the right to tack except in limited circumstances see note 1.

1144. Consolidation of mortgages.

The position of a guarantor with regard to the right of a mortgagee to whom two properties have been separately mortgaged to insist on both mortgage debts being paid off as a condition of the redemption of either property<sup>1</sup> is superior to that of a second mortgagee; for the second mortgagee is necessarily a complete stranger to the first mortgagee, whilst between the first mortgagee and the guarantor a contract exists under which the guarantor has certain rights and equities which must not be impaired by the exercise of the right of consolidation or otherwise, and which bind the mortgage securities into whatever hands they may come<sup>2</sup>. Where, however, the guarantor has in the mortgage deed expressly covenanted that, as between himself and the mortgagee, he is to be treated and regarded as a principal debtor, the right of consolidation may, apparently, be exercised against him<sup>3</sup> in cases where it may be exercised against the mortgagor<sup>4</sup>. This right can only arise when all the mortgages were originally made by the same mortgagor, and it is not enough that the different equities of redemption have passed into the same hands by assignment<sup>5</sup>.

Where a person whose estate is already mortgaged to a mortgagee joins as guarantor in a mortgage by which the estates both of the principal and of the guarantor are mortgaged to that mortgagee, the principal debtor's estate cannot be made liable for the money due under the original mortgage by the guarantor alone<sup>6</sup>.

1 For the doctrine of consolidation of mortgages see generally MORTGAGE vol 77 (2010) PARA 498 et seq. The right of consolidation was restricted by the Conveyancing Act 1881 s 17(1), which was repealed and substantially re-enacted by the Law of Property Act 1925 s 93(1). Cases decided prior to 1881 should now be read in the light of this statutory restriction.

1146. Waiver of rights of subrogation.

The rights which a guarantor possesses of standing in the creditor's place as regards the creditor's securities and equities, and on the bankruptcy of the principal debtor, may be waived by express words in the contract of guarantee itself<sup>1</sup>. They may also be impliedly waived by the guarantor's acceptance of an indemnity from the principal debtor in lieu of the right he would otherwise have possessed<sup>2</sup>, or in some other way<sup>3</sup>. Where there has been an express waiver, the fact that the guarantor, in the event of the principal debtor's bankruptcy, realises a counter-security received by him from the principal debtor by way of indemnity, and out of the proceeds discharges his liability to the creditor, will not prevent the creditor from proving for the whole of his debt, so long as he does not receive, in the whole, more than 100 pence in the pound<sup>4</sup>.

1147. Guarantor's express right to indemnification.

An express right to indemnification may be conferred upon the guarantor by the principal debtor<sup>1</sup>, in which case there can be no implied indemnity<sup>2</sup>. The precise extent of an express indemnity is a question of construction in each particular case<sup>3</sup>.

Until the guarantor has paid the creditor, the guarantor's right of indemnification against the principal debtor does not constitute a debt owed to the guarantor by the principal debtor<sup>4</sup>.

A bill of sale given by way of indemnity to a guarantor is void, because the statutory form is not applicable to such a security<sup>5</sup>.

3 See eg Dumbell v Isle of Man Rly Co (1880) 42 LT 745, PC, where an assignment to secure repayment of a loan made by an assignee to assignors and all other sums which might become due from them to him was held to cover money paid by the assignee as guarantor under a guarantee of a loan by a third party to the assignors. See also PARA 1264.

4 See PARA 1267 text and note 6. For the position of a guarantor who has paid the creditor see PARA 1158.

Where the indemnity takes the form of a deposit of title deeds with the guarantor by the principal debtor, and there is no agreement to execute a formal mortgage, the guarantor is only entitled to insist on having a memorandum signed by the principal debtor, specifying the terms of the deposit, and has no right to have a formal legal mortgage executed in his favour: Sporle v Whayman (1855) 20 Beav 607. It is no longer possible to create an equitable charge over land by the mere deposit of title deeds: see MORTGAGE vol 77 (2010) PARA 105.

1148. Guarantor's implied rights against principal debtor.

The implied rights possessed by a guarantor against the principal debtor are not identical with those which the creditor has against the principal debtor<sup>1</sup>, but are somewhat similar to those possessed by one guarantor against another<sup>2</sup>. They are available whenever the guarantee has been undertaken at the principal debtor's actual or constructive request<sup>3</sup>. Where such a request has been made, the right to indemnity<sup>4</sup> is an incident of the guarantee<sup>5</sup>, and the principal debtor will be liable without the necessity of any further request for all sums subsequently paid by the guarantor under the guarantee as money paid to the use of the principal debtor<sup>6</sup>.

A person cannot make himself a creditor of another merely by volunteering to discharge that other person's obligations<sup>7</sup>. However, even where the guarantee is given without any antecedent request, a guarantor may be entitled to be reimbursed by the principal debtor if the guarantor can bring himself within the principle which enables a person who has been compelled to make a payment for which another person is ultimately liable and of which that person obtains the benefit to recover payment from that other person<sup>8</sup>.

A guarantor for a receiver appointed by the court is entitled to be indemnified out of a balance due to him<sup>9</sup>.

1149. Where there is no right to indemnification.

In certain cases it is illegal to indemnify the guarantor, and it follows that in those cases no right to indemnification can arise by implication of law<sup>1</sup>.

A guarantor cannot, in his own name, enforce a contract of indemnity against a person who has agreed to indemnify the principal debtor in respect of the guaranteed debt<sup>2</sup>. Where by an agreement between the guarantor and the principal debtor the performance of the guarantee by the guarantor is to operate as payment to the principal debtor of a sum due to him from the guarantor, the guarantor's right to indemnification in respect of payment made by him under the guarantee cannot be enforced<sup>3</sup>.

The guarantor's right to be indemnified by the principal debtor or his estate will not be held to have been abandoned in the absence of a contract on his part to abandon it<sup>1</sup>, and the reservation in a composition deed of a creditor's remedies against a guarantor necessarily implies the continuance of the guarantor's right<sup>2</sup>.

(ii) Guarantor's Rights before He Satisfies the Guaranteed Debt

1151. Guarantor's right to exoneration from liability.

When the creditor has acquired a right to immediate payment of the debt from the guarantor, the guarantor is entitled to call upon the principal debtor to pay the amount of the debt guaranteed, so as to relieve the guarantor from his obligation, even though the guarantor has paid nothing under the guarantee<sup>1</sup>, and even though the creditor has not demanded payment from him or the principal debtor<sup>2</sup>.

It is not necessary that the creditor should have refused to sue the principal debtor in order that the guarantor may obtain this relief<sup>3</sup>, but, generally speaking, the guarantor is not entitled to relief until the debt is payable by him<sup>4</sup>. He may not therefore call upon the principal debtor to make provision for payment to the creditor before the debt is due<sup>5</sup>, and, moreover, it must be shown that a definite sum is payable<sup>6</sup>; it will not suffice to show that a demand has been made on the guarantor, and that on taking of accounts it may eventually be found that a debt is due<sup>7</sup>. In exceptional cases, however, a guarantor may obtain relief even though his liability has not yet accrued<sup>8</sup>.

1 This is a particular instance of the general equitable rule that a person entitled to an indemnity may enforce his right to it before he has suffered loss (see PARAS 1266-1267, and the cases there cited): see Earl of Ranelagh v Hayes (1683) 1 Vern 189 at 190 per Lord Keeper North, afterwards Lord Guildford; Lee v Rook (1730) Mos 318 per Sir Joseph Jekyll MR; Nisbet v Smith (1789) 2 Bro CC 579 at 592 per Lord Thurlow LC; Antrobus v Davidson (1817) 3 Mer 569 at 579 per Sir William Grant MR; Bechervaise v Lewis (1872) LR 7 CP 372 at 377 per Willes J; Alcoy and Gandia Rly and Harbour Co v Greenhill (1897) 76 LT 542 at 553; on appeal (1898) 79 LT 257, CA. ## 1152. Mortgages and charges.

A person who mortgages his property to secure the debt of another stands in the relation of guarantor towards the person whose debt is thus secured<sup>1</sup>, and is entitled to be exonerated by the principal debtor<sup>2</sup>. This principle also applies where jointly owned property is charged to secure the indebtedness of one co-owner<sup>3</sup>.

So, where a father helped his son to obtain a bank loan by transferring his house into their joint names as tenants in common in equal shares, and then joining with the son in charging the house to the bank as security for the son's debts, the son's debt to the bank was deducted from the son's half share in the house in valuing the interest which vested in the trustee on the son's bankruptcy<sup>4</sup>. However, the equity of exoneration is a principle of equity which depends upon the presumed intention of the parties<sup>5</sup>. So, where a husband and wife charged their jointly owned home to secure a bank account used by the husband both in connection with his business and for payment of expenses in connection with the matrimonial home, the equity of exoneration was held to apply only to those payments made purely for business purposes and for the husband's sole benefit<sup>6</sup>.

By express contract the guarantor may before payment be entitled to recover damages from the principal debtor where, for instance, the principal debtor covenants with the guarantor to pay the amount due to the creditor on a day named and then makes default. In such a case, however, the guarantor is under a duty to pay the amount recovered to the creditor, and if the debtor paid the creditor after the due date, the damages subsequently recoverable by the guarantor would be merely nominal<sup>1</sup>.

1156. Stoppage in transit.

A guarantor for the obligation of a buyer of goods to pay the price cannot exercise in his own name the seller's right of stoppage in transit against the goods on the buyer becoming insolvent, unless and until the guarantor himself pays the price of the goods to the seller<sup>1</sup>. However, upon paying the seller, the guarantor will be entitled to exercise that right, if not in his own name, at all events in that of the seller<sup>2</sup>.

Where the buyer transfers the bill of lading by way of pledge, the unpaid seller may stop in transit everything which is not covered by the pledge, and, being in a position analogous to that of a guarantor for the buyer to the pledgee, may compel the pledgee to have the amount secured by the pledge satisfied in the first instance as far as possible out of any other goods or securities of the buyer in the hands of the pledgee and available against the buyer<sup>3</sup>.

1 Siffken v Wray (1805) 6 East 371.

2 In such circumstances, the guarantor is 'a person who is in the position of the seller' within of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 s 38(2). The Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856 s 5 may also lead to the same result: see Imperial Bank v London and St Katharine Docks Co (1877) 5 ChD 195.

(iii) Guarantor's Rights after He Satisfies the Guaranteed Debt

1157. What amounts to payment.

The taking of the guarantor's goods in execution<sup>1</sup>, or the payment by him of money to prevent the execution<sup>2</sup>, is equivalent to payment<sup>3</sup> entitling him to indemnification<sup>4</sup>. Similarly, the exercise by the creditor of a right of set-off possessed by him against the guarantor, or the automatic set-off which occurs upon the insolvency of the creditor or the guarantor<sup>5</sup>, are both equivalent to payment by the guarantor<sup>6</sup>.

It is doubtful whether the giving by the guarantor of a promissory note to the creditor has this effect<sup>7</sup>. The giving of a bond by the guarantor to the creditor<sup>8</sup> or the substitution of one bond for another<sup>9</sup> is not equivalent to payment, nor will the payment of part of the guaranteed debt by the guarantor, together with an indemnity from the creditor against personal liability in respect of the balance of the debt<sup>10</sup>, operate as a full payment of the guaranteed debt.

The court will be satisfied with slight evidence of payment, especially where there is an admission, by silence or otherwise, on the principal debtor's part, of due payment having been made by the guarantor<sup>11</sup>.

AGAINST PRINCIPAL DEBTOR/(iii) Guarantor's Rights after He Satisfies the Guaranteed Debt/1158. Guarantor's rights on payment of part of guaranteed debt.

1158. Guarantor's rights on payment of part of guaranteed debt.

As often as the guarantor pays anything under his guarantee in relief of the principal debtor he has, unless the terms of the guarantee provide otherwise, an immediate right of action against the principal debtor<sup>1</sup> or, if he is a sub-guarantor, against any principal guarantor<sup>2</sup>, although he cannot accelerate his remedy by paying the guaranteed debt before it becomes legally due<sup>3</sup>. Consequently the principal debtor or, as the case may be, a principal guarantor, may be exposed to several claims at the suit of the same guarantor. From this inconvenience and hardship he is not protected by any rule of law requiring the guarantor to pay the whole debt due from the principal debtor before compelling reimbursement<sup>4</sup>.

A guarantor for payment of the mortgage debt by the mortgagor is entitled, on liquidating any portion of the debt, to an equitable charge to that extent on the mortgaged property<sup>5</sup>.

1159. Guarantor's position after payment.

A guarantor who has paid the creditor<sup>1</sup> in relief of the principal debtor becomes to that extent a creditor of the principal debtor<sup>2</sup>. The guarantor stands in the place of the original creditor<sup>3</sup>. So, where the guaranteed debt arose under a contract made by deed, the guarantor becomes a specialty creditor of the principal debtor<sup>4</sup>. A guarantor who makes a payment on account of a debt which is a preferential debt in bankruptcy, the administration of an insolvent estate or the winding up of a company is entitled to the same priority as the creditor would have enjoyed in respect of the amount so paid<sup>5</sup>. A guarantor who has paid the amount secured on the principal debtor's property is entitled to a lien on it<sup>6</sup>.

1 As to the nature of the guarantor's right of indemnification before he has paid the creditor see PARA 1267.

2 If payment is made after the debtor's death the guarantor is a creditor of the estate, and as such may be entitled to administration: Williams v Jukes (1864) 34 LJPM & A 60; and see Wooldridge v Norris (1868) LR 6 Eq 410. For the position of a guarantor who is a volunteer see PARA 1148.

1160. Guarantor's right to indemnification.

The guarantor's right to indemnification is a right to be reimbursed the amount which he has actually paid for the principal debtor with interest<sup>1</sup>, to which he is entitled because of his right to full indemnification from the principal debtor<sup>2</sup>. Should the guarantor have sustained damage beyond the principal and interest which he has been compelled to pay under his guarantee, he is entitled to recover that damage as well<sup>3</sup>. On his death the amount expended in respect of the guarantee is a debt due to his estate<sup>4</sup>.

A guarantor for an insolvent company which is being wound up is entitled to interest up to the commencement of the winding up or administration (if there is one) on all sums paid by him under his guarantee, but not to interest accruing subsequently<sup>5</sup>.

A guarantor who compounds a debt for which he and the principal debtor have become jointly liable can only recover from the principal debtor the amount of the composition agreed to<sup>6</sup>.

The guarantor cannot recover from the principal debtor sums paid in respect of a claim which is statute-barred<sup>7</sup> or which the guarantor knows to be illegal<sup>8</sup> or void for fraud or immorality<sup>9</sup>.

1161. Costs.

A guarantor may recover from the principal debtor the costs of defending a claim brought against him by the creditor if he undertook the defence with the debtor's authority<sup>1</sup>, or reasonably defended the proceedings in the debtor's interests<sup>2</sup>, or the costs were for some reason unavoidably incurred<sup>3</sup>. If, however, the guarantor defends the claim solely for his own benefit<sup>4</sup>, or incurs costs by unreasonably defending or persisting in defending the claim<sup>5</sup>, he cannot recover the costs from the principal debtor or any amount unreasonably incurred.

3 Pierce v Williams (1854) 23 LJEx 322, where a writ issued against the guarantor was the first notification to the guarantor from the creditor of the principal debtor's default. The costs of the writ, but not the costs of the subsequent proceedings were held to be recoverable from the principal debtor. As to the recovery of costs from co-guarantors see PARA 1172. It was formerly the position that a guarantor who was entitled to recover from the principal debtor the costs of defending an action had a right to costs on the common fund basis: Howard v

Lovegrove (1870) LR 6 Exch 43. The appropriate basis would presumably now be the indemnity basis: cf Gomba Holdings (UK) Ltd v Minorities Finance Ltd (No 2) [1993] Ch 171, [1992] 4 All ER 588, CA; and see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 12 (2009) PARA 1806. ### 1162. Defence by guarantor to creditor's claim.

A guarantor is not bound to resist the creditor's claim against him if he has no good defence to it, and may make the best compromise he can in such circumstances and then recover from the principal debtor indemnification in respect of the loss incurred<sup>1</sup>. Where, however, a guarantor seeks to recover under an indemnity bond the loss sustained by him, the mere production of a judgment signed against him by the creditor is not, apparently, of itself sufficient evidence of the loss<sup>2</sup>.

(iv) Enforcement of Guarantor's Rights

1163. Claim by guarantor for indemnification.

A guarantor who wishes to enforce his right to an indemnity from the principal debtor may bring a claim for indemnification either in the High Court or in a county court<sup>1</sup>. Representations made by the guarantor which do not give rise to a promissory estoppel or a contract of release will not prevent him from enforcing his right to an indemnity<sup>2</sup>.

Where the principal debtor has expressly agreed to indemnify the guarantor, the guarantor should sue on that agreement<sup>3</sup>. Apart from statute, if an express indemnity is given to more than one guarantor, it is a question of construction whether it is joint or several<sup>4</sup>.

Where there is no express agreement by the principal debtor to indemnify the guarantor, the guarantor may enforce his right by bringing a claim in his own name<sup>5</sup> against the principal debtor for money paid to the debtor's use at his request<sup>6</sup>. In the absence of an express stipulation on the subject between the parties an implied promise to indemnify exists<sup>7</sup>.

The guarantor may claim indemnification from the principal debtor by bringing a Part 20 claim<sup>8</sup> against him, whether or not the guarantor and the principal debtor are sued in the same claim by the creditor<sup>9</sup>.

1 Subject to certain exceptions, a county court now has unlimited jurisdiction to hear and determine any claim founded on contract: see the County Courts Act 1984 s 15; and COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARAS 712, 722. The remedy of the guarantor may be barred by the running of time: see PARA 1183 et seq. As to whether a Part 20 claim should be dealt with separately from the main claim see CPR 20.9; and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 625. Under the former civil procedure, it was held that when the guarantor availed himself of the procedure for serving a third party notice in order to enforce an express contract by the principal debtor to indemnify him, he could sign judgment against the principal debtor before anything has been paid under the guarantee: English and Scottish Trust Co v Flatau (1887) 36 WR 238. It was also held that while the guarantor could join the principal debtor by way of a third party notice, the principal debtor could not in general claim to be entitled to join the guarantor: see Re Kitchin, ex p Young (1881) 17 ChD 668 at 670, CA, per James LJ. #### 1164. Set-off or counterclaim.

In an appropriate case, a principal debtor who has a money claim against the guarantor may be able to rely upon that claim as a total or partial defence by way of set-off to the guarantor's claim for indemnification. Similarly, in an appropriate case, the guarantor may set up his claim for indemnification as a defence to a money claim against him by the principal debtor<sup>1</sup>. Where there is an express agreement of indemnity and all parties are solvent<sup>2</sup>, the right of set-off may be excluded by the terms of that agreement<sup>3</sup>.

Where the guarantor or the principal debtor is insolvent, the right of set-off is statutory<sup>4</sup>. Parties may not increase<sup>5</sup> or diminish<sup>6</sup> by contract the extent of the rights of set-off conferred in bankruptcy and liquidation. However, an agreement by the guarantor not to prove in the principal debtor's insolvency in competition with the creditor will be upheld<sup>7</sup>.

A guarantor who has not paid the liability guaranteed cannot set off his contingent claim against the insolvent principal debtor for an indemnity against a cross-claim which he owes to the principal debtor<sup>8</sup>. If he pays the liability after the creditor has proved in the principal debtor's insolvency, the creditor will hold any dividends received in the insolvency in respect of that liability on trust for the guarantor<sup>9</sup>. However, where the guarantor pays the guaranteed liability before the creditor proves for the debt<sup>10</sup> in the principal debtor's insolvency, the guarantor may himself prove for the debt and may rely upon his right of indemnity by way of set-off against any claims which the principal debtor may have against him<sup>11</sup>.

(5) MUTUAL RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF CO-GUARANTORS

(i) Co-guarantor's Right to Contribution

A. BY AND AGAINST WHOM RIGHT TO CONTRIBUTION IS AVAILABLE

1165. How right to contribution arises.

A guarantor who has paid more than his share of the common liability is entitled to compel contribution<sup>1</sup> from his co-guarantors<sup>2</sup>, whether they are bound jointly and severally<sup>3</sup> or severally<sup>4</sup>, and by the same or different instruments<sup>5</sup>, and whether the guarantor claiming contribution did or did not know, when he became bound as such, that he was co-guarantor with others<sup>6</sup>.

The right to contribution is not founded on contract, but is the result of a general equity arising at the inception of the contract of guarantee on the ground of equality of burden and benefit<sup>7</sup>. In determining whether a relationship is that of principal and guarantor, giving rise to contribution amongst co-guarantors, the substance of the transaction must be considered and the form of the instrument creating it may, in a proper case, be wholly disregarded<sup>8</sup>. A right to contribution may arise even though the payment was made without the co-guarantor's knowledge and prior consent and in the absence of a written demand by the creditor, as required by the contract of guarantee<sup>9</sup>.

It is not entirely clear whether the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978<sup>10</sup> applies to claims for contribution between co-guarantors<sup>11</sup>. It seems that if the guarantor's promise is that a third party will perform specified obligations, then any failure by the third party to do so will mean that the guarantor becomes liable in damages for breach of his promise and the 1978 Act will apply. If, on the other hand, the guarantor's promise is that in certain events he will pay a sum of money, he becomes liable in debt once those events have happened and the 1978 Act does not apply<sup>12</sup>.

1 The overpaying guarantor may claim contribution from the underpaying guarantor to equalise the burden upon them in two ways: (1) directly, under the legal and equitable jurisdiction in such cases; or (2) by taking over the creditor's rights by subrogation under the Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856 s 5. For the jurisdiction to order contribution between persons liable to a common demand see generally RESTITUTION. ### 1166. When there is no right to contribution.

Where parties are not liable to a common demand there is no right of contribution between them<sup>1</sup>, and there is no principle of law which requires a person to contribute to another's payment merely because he has derived a material benefit from it<sup>2</sup>.

There is no right of contribution when guarantors are bound by different instruments for equal portions of a debt due from the same principal debtor, the guarantee entered into by each being a separate and distinct transaction<sup>3</sup>, nor where it is expressly arranged by contract that each is to be individually answerable only for a given portion of one sum of money due from the principal debtor<sup>4</sup>.

Where co-defendants are decreed to pay the costs of a claim, it seems that one co-defendant cannot, by an independent claim, obtain contribution in respect of those costs against the other<sup>5</sup>.

1167. Exceptions to right to contribution.

There is, it seems, no right of contribution against a person who became co-guarantor with another person either at the request of that other person<sup>1</sup> or on the promise and undertaking of that other person to indemnify him from loss<sup>2</sup>, where there are circumstances from which it can be inferred that, as between the two, one only was to be liable for the guaranteed debt. Nor is there any right of contribution where the surrounding circumstances and the language of the instrument under which several persons are bound indicate that there is a joint liability but no co-guarantee<sup>3</sup>. A sub-guarantor, that is to say a person standing guarantor for a principal guarantor, is not liable for contribution at the instance of a principal guarantor<sup>4</sup>.

There can be no contribution if the co-guarantor is not liable under his guarantee, either because liability has not yet attached<sup>5</sup> or because his guarantee has been avoided<sup>6</sup>. So, there is no right of contribution against a person who agreed to become guarantor on condition that another person would sign as a co-guarantor, if that condition has not been fulfilled<sup>7</sup>. Similarly, there can be no right to contribution if the person seeking to enforce it has been guilty of misrepresentation or non-disclosure amounting to misrepresentation<sup>8</sup>.

1 Turner v Davies (1796) 2 Esp 478 (which does not seem to be well reported), where the guarantor seeking to enforce contribution had received security from the principal in respect of his guarantee liability. ### 1168. Relief before payment.

A guarantor's right to contribution from his co-guarantors may arise before he has made payment under his guarantee<sup>1</sup>.

Where the creditor has obtained judgment, or something equivalent to judgment, against the guarantor, the guarantor may bring a claim against his co-guarantors to compel them to contribute to the common liability<sup>2</sup>. In such a claim, the guarantor may obtain a declaration of his right to contribution<sup>3</sup>.

A guarantor who holds an indemnity bond from a third person in respect of the guarantee liability may, after he has been called upon to pay, but before he has done so, maintain a claim against the third person's executors for administration, payment of the guaranteed debt and an indemnity<sup>4</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(5) MUTUAL RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF CO-GUARANTORS/(i) Co-guarantor's Right to Contribution/B. WHEN RIGHT TO CONTRIBUTION ARISES/1169. Relief after payment.

1169. Relief after payment.

In general, a guarantor's right to contribution from his co-guarantors after payment does not arise until the guarantor has paid more than his total proportion or share of the common liability<sup>1</sup>. He may not, therefore, sue his co-guarantors for a rateable proportion of what he has paid as soon as he has paid any part of the debt<sup>2</sup>. However, where the guaranteed debt is payable by instalments, and each instalment is to be regarded as a separate debt, a guarantor who has paid the whole of one instalment may, it seems, be entitled to recover contribution from his co-guarantors in respect of such payment to the common creditor<sup>3</sup>.

A guarantor may also claim contribution if the creditor has accepted his payment, even though not exceeding the guarantor's share of the liability guaranteed, in full and final settlement of the guaranteed liability. In those circumstances, the guarantor has paid all that he can ever be called upon to pay, and there is then an equitable debt for contribution upon which even a bankruptcy petition can be founded<sup>4</sup>.

A guarantor who has paid his full share of the guaranteed debt has a right of action against his co-guarantors whenever he pays anything further<sup>5</sup>.

3 Re Macdonald, ex p Grant [1888] WN 130, CA, as explained in Stirling v Burdett [1911] 2 Ch 418 at 429. It appears from an examination of the record in Lawson v Wright (1786) 1 Cox Eq Cas 275 (which has been treated as an authority for the proposition that if the debt is payable by instalments a guarantor who pays the whole of an instalment may recover contribution from his co-guarantor) that the amount paid by the guarantor who was claiming contribution was the whole of the money which was or could become due under the contract guaranteed by the co-guarantors, and was not merely the payment of one instalment of a debt of which further instalments remained to be paid (see Stirling v Burdett above at 427). In Stirling v Burdett it was held that although a certain number of guarantors had paid more than their share of interest on a mortgage debt and premiums on a life policy due at the time when the payment was made, their right to contribution had not arisen, as the principal, interest and premiums together constituted one debt, of which entire debt their due proportion had not been paid. It seems, therefore, that the proposition laid down in Craythorne v Swinburne (1807) 14 Ves 160 at 164 that a guarantor has a right to call upon his co-guarantor for contribution, if called upon by the creditor to pay the principal debt or any part of it, must be read subject to the qualifications (1) that the guarantor has paid more than his proper proportion of the sums recoverable from the debtor; and (2) that, where the debt is payable by instalments, each instalment can properly be regarded as a separate debt.

What amounts to payment of the guaranteed debt.

1170. What amounts to payment of the guaranteed debt.

The payment made by a guarantor under his guarantee is not treated as a payment made by him voluntarily<sup>1</sup>, and in order to be entitled to recover contribution he need not show that he abstained from paying the creditor until the creditor compelled him to pay<sup>2</sup>. The payment in respect of which contribution is claimed must, however, have been made by the guarantor in part at least out of his own money<sup>3</sup> or its equivalent<sup>4</sup>.

When a guarantor pays with the assistance of a stranger to whom securities for the guaranteed debt are thereupon assigned by the creditor, both will be treated as one person, and therefore the claim for contribution will be allowed only after the guarantor has brought into account money received by the stranger in respect of the securities<sup>5</sup>.

The guarantor should pay the money due to the person legally entitled to receive it<sup>6</sup>. Otherwise the payment may not operate to relieve him from liability under his guarantee, nor entitle him to claim contribution<sup>7</sup>.

C. WHAT IS RECOVERABLE FROM A CO-GUARANTOR BY WAY OF CONTRIBUTION

1171. Amount recoverable from co-guarantor.

The amount recoverable by a guarantor from each co-guarantor is always<sup>1</sup> regulated by the number of solvent guarantors<sup>2</sup>.

Where each guarantor is liable for an equal amount, all contribute equally towards the common debt, and, if not equally liable, then proportionately to the amount for which each is liable<sup>3</sup>. Where guarantors are bound by separate deeds and in unequal amounts, no one of them can be called upon to contribute beyond the sum for which he is liable under his own particular deed<sup>4</sup>.

Interest is recoverable by a guarantor on the sum due to him for contribution from the date when he paid the common creditor<sup>5</sup>.

1 The subject to any adjustment under the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978 s 2. As to whether that Act applies to claims for contribution between co-guarantors see PARA 1165. See generally TORT vol 45(2) (Reissue) PARA 349 et seq.

2 At law, a guarantor who had paid the whole debt could recover from each of his co-guarantors only an aliquot part according to the whole number of guarantors. If one was insolvent, he had no further right against the rest: Cowell v Edwards (1800) 2 Bos & P 268; Browne v Lee (1827) 6 B & C 689. In equity, however, he could make the solvent guarantors contribute rateably to the entire debt: Peter v Rich (1629) 1 Rep Ch 34; Hole v Harrison (1673) 1 Cas in Ch 246; Hitchman v Stewart (1855) 3 Drew 271. ### 1172. Costs.

The costs of a claim defended by a guarantor cannot, as a rule, be recovered by him as part of his claim for contribution against his co-guarantors unless he was authorised by them to defend<sup>1</sup>, or it is established that in defending the claim he adopted a prudent and reasonable course<sup>2</sup>. Thus, costs incurred in proceedings by which the common creditor's claim was reduced may be included in ascertaining the amount of contribution payable by one co-guarantor to another co-guarantor<sup>3</sup>.

When claiming contribution the guarantor must give credit for all that he has received from the principal debtor or by means of a counter-security given by way of indemnity<sup>4</sup>.

D. ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHT TO CONTRIBUTION

1173. Claim for contribution.

A guarantor who wishes to enforce his right to contribution from his co-guarantors may bring a claim either in the High Court or in a county court<sup>1</sup>. The claim is for money paid to the use of the co-guarantor sued, unless there is a covenant for payment, in which case the claim should be brought on that covenant<sup>2</sup>. A claim for money paid, however, is not available unless the claimant has actually paid money or its equivalent and the proportion of contribution recoverable has been ascertained<sup>3</sup>. Consequently proceedings to ascertain the amount may have to be taken. Particulars of demand are, moreover, required from a guarantor claiming from a co-guarantor payment of a definite sum by way of contribution, and not merely an account<sup>4</sup>.

The guarantor may claim a contribution from the principal debtor by bringing a Part 20 claim<sup>5</sup> against him, whether or not the guarantor and the principal debtor are sued in the same claim by the creditor<sup>6</sup>.

The amount of contribution recoverable from each of several co-guarantors is governed<sup>7</sup> by the number of solvent guarantors<sup>8</sup>.

1 Subject to certain exceptions, a county court now has unlimited jurisdiction to hear and determine any claim founded on contract: see the County Courts Act 1984 s 15; and COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARAS 712, 722. In a claim by a guarantor for contribution from his co-guarantors the principal debtor and each of the co-guarantors (or their personal representatives) should all be made parties unless the fact of their insolvency is admitted or clearly proved<sup>1</sup>. Even in such a case the claimant has, apparently, the right to elect whether he will bring the insolvent co-obligor or his representative before the court<sup>2</sup>.

In case of the death of a co-guarantor his representatives are liable to contribute, to the extent of his assets, what was due from him under his guarantee<sup>3</sup>.

Where the principal debtor is a party to the claim, his insolvency need not be proved (Cowell v Edwards (1800) 2 Bos & P 268; Lawson v Wright (1786) 1 Cox Eq Cas 275), although possibly such proof may be required where he is not a party to the claim (Lawson v Wright, cited by Lord Hanworth MR in Hay v Carter above at 403). ### 1175. Set-off or counterclaim.

In an appropriate case, a co-guarantor who has a money claim against another co-guarantor may be able to rely upon that claim as a total or partial defence by way of set-off to the other co-guarantor's claim for contribution. Similarly, in an appropriate case, a co-guarantor may set up his claim for contribution as a defence to a money claim against him by another co-guarantor<sup>1</sup>. Where there is an express agreement for contribution and all parties are solvent<sup>2</sup>, the right of set-off may be excluded by the terms of that agreement<sup>3</sup>.

Where one or both of the co-guarantors is insolvent, the right of set-off is statutory<sup>4</sup>. Parties may not increase<sup>5</sup> or diminish<sup>6</sup> by contract the extent of the rights of set-off conferred in bankruptcy and liquidation.

A guarantor who has not paid the liability guaranteed cannot set off his contingent claim for contribution from the insolvent co-guarantor against a cross-claim which he owes that co-guarantor<sup>7</sup>. However, a guarantor who pays the whole debt to the creditor can take over the creditor's proof for the whole debt in the insolvency of the co-guarantor, although he cannot receive a dividend of more than the co-guarantor's share<sup>8</sup>. Where the creditor has not proved in the insolvency of the co-guarantor, the solvent guarantor who pays the debt can only prove for the insolvent co-guarantor's share<sup>9</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(5) MUTUAL RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF CO-GUARANTORS/(i) Co-guarantor's Right to Contribution/D. ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHT TO CONTRIBUTION/1176. Defences by co-guarantor to claim for contribution.

1176. Defences by co-guarantor to claim for contribution.

A counterclaim against the creditor for damages for breach of warranty is not available as a defence in proceedings between co-guarantors, at least without bringing in the principal debtor whose claim it really is<sup>1</sup>.

A guarantor's right to recover contribution from a co-guarantor is not affected by the fact that the creditor has given time to the guarantor seeking to enforce contribution<sup>2</sup>. However, an agreement by one co-guarantor to give time to the principal debtor<sup>3</sup>, or to release him<sup>4</sup>, may have the effect of discharging the other co-guarantor from his obligation to contribute<sup>5</sup>.

Where one of two guarantors who holds an indemnity from a third person in respect of the guarantee liability discharges the other guarantor from his liability to pay contribution, to that extent he relieves the third person from his liability to indemnify<sup>6</sup>.

5 The reason for this rule is that the giving of time or the release affects the co-guarantor's right of indemnity against the principal debtor: see Griffith v Wade (1966) 60 DLR (2d) 62 at 67 per Johnson JA, Alta SC. Compare the effect of similar actions by the creditor, as to which see PARA 1224 et seq. It follows that there is no release where the co-guarantor's acts are obviously incapable of affecting the other co-guarantor's rights against the principal debtor. A clause which deems the co-guarantors to be principal debtors as between themselves and the creditor will prevent a co-guarantor from relying upon this principle to release him from liability to another co-guarantor who has paid off the debt and so stands in the place of the creditor: Greenwood v Francis [1899] 1 QB 312, CA. See also Hodgson v Hodgson (1837) 2 Keen 704; Vorley v Barrett (1856) 1 CBNS 225; Re Gervais' Estate [1903] 1 IR 172. In Greenwood v Francis above at 320, AL Smith LJ stated that the co-guarantor's defences to a claim for contribution were limited to those which one principal debtor could raise against another. However, the guarantee considered in that case made both guarantors liable as principal debtors, and Way v Hearn (1862) 11 CBNS 774 was not cited.

1177. Guarantor's right to securities.

A guarantor who has made payment of more than his due proportion of the common liability is entitled to have assigned to him all the creditor's rights and securities, whether satisfied or not, for the purpose of obtaining contribution<sup>1</sup> including, apparently, securities received by the creditor from co-guarantors<sup>2</sup>, and he may recover contribution by means of those securities<sup>3</sup>.

He is similarly entitled to the benefit of all securities which have been taken by any other co-guarantor to indemnify himself against the common liability, and also of a judgment obtained by the creditor against the principal debtor and his guarantors<sup>4</sup>, and for the purposes of proof against an insolvent estate may stand in the shoes of the judgment creditor, whether the judgment has actually been assigned or not<sup>5</sup>.

1178. Marshalling of securities.

As between co-guarantors who have given security for the payment of the principal debt, a guarantor who pays more than his share of the guaranteed liability<sup>1</sup> is entitled to have the securities marshalled so as to ensure that each co-guarantor pays his due proportion and no more, without taking into account any rights of set-off that might otherwise exist as between the co-guarantors<sup>2</sup>. This is so, even though one or more of the co-guarantors is insolvent<sup>3</sup>.

A co-guarantor must bring into hotchpot whatever he receives from any counter-security obtained by him from the principal debtor, even though he consented to become a guarantor only on condition of receiving such counter-security, and although the other co-guarantors were ignorant of this when they themselves became guarantors<sup>1</sup>.

When by means of a counter-security the guarantor has been repaid what he has paid on account of the guaranteed debt, and has shared the amount thus received by him with his co-guarantors, he will again be entitled to recover out of the counter-security the amount so handed over by him to them, whereupon their right to participate will again arise, and so on until the whole of the payments made by the co-guarantors on account of the guaranteed debt have been refunded or the value of the counter-security has been exhausted<sup>2</sup>.

1180. Claims by the creditor.

The creditor's claim against the guarantor under a guarantee is a claim in contract<sup>1</sup>. Where the guarantee is not made by deed<sup>2</sup>, a claim to enforce the guarantee may therefore not be brought after the expiration of six years from the date on which the cause of action accrued<sup>3</sup>. Where the guarantee is made by deed<sup>4</sup>, the period is 12 years from the accrual of the cause of action<sup>5</sup>.

1 See PARA 1013.

2 The Limitation Act 1980 s 5 in fact refers to actions founded on 'simple contract', as to the meaning of which see 2 Bl Com 465-466; and CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 618.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(6) LIMITATION PERIODS/(i) Creditor's Claims/1181. Accrual of the creditor's cause of action.

1181. Accrual of the creditor's cause of action.

The creditor's cause of action accrues, and time begins to run against him and in favour of the guarantor, when the guarantor becomes liable to make payment under the guarantee<sup>1</sup>. When that liability accrues depends upon the terms of the guarantee<sup>2</sup>. The secondary nature of a contract of guarantee<sup>3</sup> means that the guarantor will generally<sup>4</sup> not be liable unless the principal debtor is liable<sup>5</sup>. However, the terms of the guarantee often prescribe conditions in addition to the liability of the principal debtor which must be satisfied before the guarantor also becomes liable.

For example where, on the true construction of the guarantee, a valid demand upon the guarantor is a necessary ingredient of the creditor's cause of action against the guarantor<sup>6</sup>, time will not begin to run until such a demand has been made<sup>7</sup>. Similarly, where the guarantee is for the safety of investments, time only runs from the date that they become unsafe<sup>8</sup>. Where the guarantee is expressed to be a continuing guarantee and to apply to the balance from time to time owing by the principal debtor to the creditor, time runs only from the date each such balance is constituted by the excess of total debits over total credits, not from the date each advance is made to the principal debtor<sup>9</sup>. If, however, the balance of indebtedness under the guarantee has accrued due and become payable in consequence of a demand, the creditor cannot start the limitation period running again by including that sum as part of a larger sum which is the subject of a fresh demand<sup>10</sup>.

Where no demand is necessary, and no other pre-conditions to the guarantor's liability are imposed by the terms of the guarantee, time will run from the moment that the cause of action against the principal debtor is complete, or the moment that the guarantee comes into effect<sup>11</sup>, if later<sup>12</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(6) LIMITATION PERIODS/(i) Creditor's Claims/1182. Principal debt statute-barred.

1182. Principal debt statute-barred.

A guarantor cannot rely upon the provisions of the Limitation Act 1980 to defeat a claim by the creditor until the period of limitation applicable to claims under the guarantee<sup>1</sup> has itself expired. It is no defence for the guarantor simply to show that the creditor's claim against the principal debtor is time-barred, unless the claim under the guarantee is also thereby barred<sup>2</sup>.

Prima facie, the fact that the guaranteed debt was, as against the principal debtor, statute-barred at the time when he paid it will not prevent the guarantor from recovering an indemnity from the principal debtor<sup>3</sup>.

1183. Express indemnity.

In cases where the principal debtor has entered into an express agreement to indemnify the guarantor, there is no implied indemnity<sup>1</sup>. The guarantor must found his claim for an indemnity upon the express agreement<sup>2</sup>. The period of limitation will therefore be that appropriate to the indemnity contract concerned. Where the indemnity is not made by deed<sup>3</sup>, a claim to enforce it may therefore not be brought after the expiration of six years from the date on which the cause of action accrued<sup>4</sup>. Where the indemnity is made by deed<sup>5</sup>, the period is 12 years from the accrual of the cause of action<sup>6</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(6) LIMITATION PERIODS/(ii) Guarantor's Claims against Principal Debtor/1184. When time runs under an express indemnity.

1184. When time runs under an express indemnity.

The extent of the indemnity afforded by an express contract of indemnity and the time at which the cause of action under that indemnity arises will depend upon the terms of the contract<sup>1</sup>.

If the indemnity is a simple indemnity against liability, the cause of action will come into existence when the person indemnified incurs the liability<sup>2</sup>. In certain circumstances, a liability may be incurred for this purpose when the liability is still merely contingent<sup>3</sup>. So, where the directors of a housebuilding company agreed to indemnify the National House-Building Council against all losses which might be incurred by the council by reason of the company's failure to perform its obligations under the scheme, their obligation to indemnify the council arose when defective houses were built, not when the company failed to honour the award obtained by the house-owners<sup>4</sup>.

However, if the indemnity is a general indemnity, time will not begin to run until that liability has been established and ascertained by judgment, an arbitration award, or agreement<sup>5</sup>. The terms of the indemnity may prescribe additional conditions which must be satisfied before the indemnifier becomes liable<sup>6</sup>.

1186. When time runs under an implied indemnity.

The implied indemnity which arises when a guarantor enters into a guarantee at the request of the principal debtor is a general indemnity<sup>1</sup>. Although other relief is available under such an implied indemnity prior to the indemnified person making payment<sup>2</sup>, the guarantor's cause of action against the principal debtor for payment by way of indemnity does not arise until the guarantor has himself paid the creditor<sup>3</sup>. Time therefore does not begin to run against the guarantor until that moment<sup>4</sup>.

1187. Express agreement.

Where there is an express agreement for contribution between co-guarantors, the claim to contribution should be brought under that agreement<sup>1</sup>; and the accrual of the cause of action and the appropriate period of limitation will depend upon the terms of the agreement<sup>2</sup>.

1 See PARA 1173 text and note 2.

2 Cf PARAS 1183-1184, where the accrual of the cause of action and the appropriate period of limitation under an express indemnity are discussed.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(6) LIMITATION PERIODS/(iii) Contribution between Co-guarantors/1188. Implied rights of contribution.

1188. Implied rights of contribution.

Where there is no express agreement, the guarantor's primary cause of action against a co-guarantor for contribution is for money paid to the debtor's use at his request<sup>1</sup>. Such a claim is treated as one founded on a simple contract<sup>2</sup>, and so the period applicable is one of six years from the date on which the cause of action accrued<sup>3</sup>.

In general, a guarantor's right of action against a co-guarantor for payment to him of contribution does not arise until the guarantor has paid more than his proportion of the common liability<sup>4</sup>. Time will begin to run against him from that moment<sup>5</sup>.

It is not entirely clear whether the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978<sup>6</sup> applies to claims for contribution between co-guarantors<sup>7</sup>. It seems that if the guarantor's promise is that a third party will perform specified obligations, then any failure by the third party to do so will mean that the guarantor becomes liable in damages for breach of his promise and the 1978 Act will apply<sup>8</sup>. In such a case the period of limitation applicable will be a period of two years from the date of any judgment or award against the guarantor seeking contribution, or if there is no judgment or award, the earliest date on which the amount to be paid by him is agreed between him and the creditor<sup>9</sup>. If, on the other hand, the guarantor's promise is that in certain events he will pay a sum of money, he becomes liable in debt once those events have happened, the 1978 Act does not apply<sup>10</sup> and the period of limitation applicable will be six years<sup>11</sup>.

GUARANTEE/(i) Fulfilment of Purpose of the Guarantee/1189. Discharge by performance of principal obligation.

(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE

(i) Fulfilment of Purpose of the Guarantee

1189. Discharge by performance of principal obligation.

The secondary nature of the contract of guarantee<sup>1</sup> means that the guarantor is not liable unless the principal debtor is liable<sup>2</sup>. So, if the principal obligation is discharged by performance<sup>3</sup>, the guarantee is also thereby discharged<sup>4</sup>.

<sup>3</sup> Generally, the guarantor will also be discharged where the creditor releases the principal debtor from liability: see PARA 1218 et seq.

<sup>4</sup> See General Produce Co v United Bank Ltd [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep 255 at 258; and PARA 1090. In Western Credit Ltd v Alberry [1964] 2 All ER 938, [1964] 1 WLR 945, CA, the principal debtor exercised a right given to him by the terms of the principal contract to terminate the hiring by returning the car to the creditor and paying the amount necessary to bring the payments made by him up to three-quarters of the total hire-purchase price. The creditor's claim against the guarantor for its further loss of profit failed, because the principal debtor had fully performed his obligations in one of the ways contemplated by the principal contract. As to the discharge of contractual obligations by performance see generally CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 921 et seq.

Under many building contracts, however, the contractor's obligation to complete the work is not fulfilled until: (1) the work is complete in fact; and (2) the architect or engineer has issued a certificate that the work has been completed to his satisfaction. A surety is not discharged where the works have only been substantially completed: see BUILDING CONTRACTS, ARCHITECTS, ENGINEERS, VALUERS AND SURVEYORS vol 4(3) (Reissue) PARA 187.

1190. Payment by the principal debtor.

The most common example of performance by the principal debtor discharging the guarantee by discharging the principal obligation is where the principal debtor pays the creditor the full amount of the guaranteed debt. Such a payment will normally<sup>1</sup> discharge the guarantor<sup>2</sup>.

Whether any particular payment discharges the principal contract depends upon the terms of the principal contract<sup>3</sup> and the circumstances of the payment. For example, if the creditor accepts a promissory note which, by its terms, constitutes a full discharge of the guaranteed debt<sup>4</sup>, this is a good payment discharging the guarantor from his guarantee. Whether a payment of less than the full amount discharges the guaranteed debt may turn on the question whether the agreement to take less is supported by consideration<sup>5</sup>, or is binding by virtue of a promissory estoppel<sup>6</sup>. In certain circumstances, it may depend upon the form of receipt given<sup>7</sup>. The mere fact of there being a balance, equal in amount to the guaranteed debt, due and owing from the creditor to the principal debtor in respect of other transactions outside the scope of the guarantee will not operate as a payment so as to discharge the guarantor<sup>8</sup>. However, where such a balance is set off<sup>9</sup>, for example on the insolvency of the principal debtor<sup>10</sup>, that will amount to a payment discharging the guarantor<sup>11</sup>.

To have the effect of discharging the guarantee, the payment must be a valid payment under the principal contract. So it was held that a payment which was liable to be avoided as a fraudulent preference did not discharge the guarantee<sup>12</sup>.

The guarantor will be discharged to the extent of the sum received by the creditor from the principal debtor attributable to the principal contract, whether the principal debtor pays the guaranteed debt voluntarily<sup>13</sup> or under compulsion<sup>14</sup>.

The concept of fraudulent preference in insolvency has been replaced by the wider statutory concept of voidable preference: see the Insolvency Act 1986 ss 239, 340. The court may order any surety or guarantor whose obligations were released in whole or in part under a transaction at an undervalue or by the giving of a voidable preference to be under such new or revived obligations as the court thinks fit: s 241(1)(e) (company liquidation), s 342(1)(e) (bankruptcy). See also s 425(1)(e), which makes similar provisions for reviving the obligations of a guarantor where the court reverses the effect of a transaction defrauding creditors. In view of these specific statutory provisions, the cases cited above may have to be reconsidered. A guarantor of a payment challenged as a preference (or, probably, as a transaction at an undervalue or a fraud on creditors) should be joined as a party to the application: Re Idenden (a bankrupt), ex p Trustee of the Property of the Bankrupt v Bateman & Co Ltd [1970] 2 All ER 387n, [1970] 1 WLR 1015. As to the avoidance of preferences in insolvency see generally BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARA 656 et seq; and COMPANY AND PARTNERSHIP INSOLVENCY.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(i) Fulfilment of Purpose of the Guarantee/1191. Appropriation.

1191. Appropriation.

In the absence of express contract<sup>1</sup> the mere fact that there is a guarantee does not take away from the principal debtor or the creditor any powers which they would otherwise possess of appropriating payment<sup>2</sup>.

In general, a debtor has the right when he makes a payment to appropriate the money to any debt which he chooses, and the creditor is bound, if he takes the money, to apply it in the manner directed by the debtor<sup>3</sup>. So, where the principal debtor owes money to the creditor on two accounts of which only one is guaranteed, he may appropriate a payment made by him to either of the accounts<sup>4</sup>. The debtor need not make his appropriation expressly, provided that his intention to appropriate can be inferred<sup>5</sup>. Where, therefore, there is evidence of an intention that payments made by a principal debtor are to be applied in relief of the guarantor's liability, they will be so applied<sup>6</sup>, but not otherwise<sup>7</sup>.

If the principal debtor makes no appropriation the creditor may usually do so<sup>8</sup>, and may do so at any time up to the very last moment, that is, until he has finally exercised the right or something has happened which would render it inequitable for him to exercise it<sup>9</sup>. So, the creditor may apply payments made by the principal debtor to a separate debt which was already in existence when the guarantee was given, whether or not the guarantor knew of that pre-existing debt when he became bound<sup>10</sup>.

Where neither debtor nor creditor exercises the option to appropriate payments, and no evidence is forthcoming from which a contrary intention is to be inferred<sup>11</sup>, the law appropriates them to the earliest debt or item of debit<sup>12</sup>. Although in the case of appropriation of payments interest is presumed to be paid before capital, this rule does not apply to the case of interest on an overdrawn account, which, according to banking practice, has been from time to time converted into principal<sup>13</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(i) Fulfilment of Purpose of the Guarantee/1192. Restrictions on the creditor's right of appropriation.

1192. Restrictions on the creditor's right of appropriation.

Prima facie, the creditor's right of appropriation does not apply where there is one entire account into which all receipts and payments are carried in order of date, so that all sums paid in form one blended fund<sup>1</sup>. In such a case, the presumption is that the first item on the debit side of the account is intended to be discharged or reduced by the first item on the credit side, and the various items are appropriated in the order in which the receipts and payments are set against each other in the account<sup>2</sup>. This presumption may, however, be rebutted by evidence of an agreement to the contrary or of circumstances from which a contrary intention is to be inferred<sup>3</sup>.

There are limits to the extent to which a banker may appropriate payments made by a customer to the prejudice of a guarantor for that customer's account<sup>4</sup>. Where the guarantee is a continuing one, the guarantor has no right, in the absence of special agreement, to control the appropriation of payments into the principal debtor's account<sup>5</sup>, so long as the banker deals with the accounts in the ordinary way of business<sup>6</sup>. However, while the account is unbroken, a guarantor should not be prejudiced by any departure from the rule of appropriation of items in order of date, unless he has expressly consented to such departure, or his consent may be implied from the character of his engagement<sup>7</sup>. So, where the guarantor has guaranteed the balance on an existing account, the banker cannot (unless the guarantee provides otherwise) open a new account for the customer during the currency of the guarantee and appropriate all payments in to the new account<sup>8</sup>. On the other hand, if the guarantee is terminated the banker may break the account and carry all payments in to the new, unsecured, account<sup>9</sup>.

Where it is evident from the terms of the guarantee that a guarantor for advances by a bank to its customer is only to be liable if the customer does not pay enough money into his account, then all subsequent payments from time to time made by the customer must be appropriated to the guaranteed debt<sup>10</sup>.

1193. Appropriation in insolvency.

On the insolvency of the principal debtor, the guarantor for a debt payable by instalments is not entitled, by virtue of the doctrine of appropriation of payments, to have the dividend received by the creditor in respect of the whole debt applied in discharge of one instalment of it, as that dividend must be applied rateably in part payment of each instalment as it becomes due<sup>1</sup>.

Where, at the time of a guarantee of a current account with the bank, the bank but not the guarantor knew that the debtor had already committed an act of bankruptcy, it was held that the guarantor's payments should be appropriated to that part of the debt which had been secured before the act of bankruptcy and so was provable<sup>2</sup>.

1 Martin v Brecknell (1813) 2 M & S 39.

2 Re Mason, ex p Sharp (1844) 3 Mont D & De G 490. The doctrine of relation back to the earliest available act of bankruptcy was abolished by the Insolvency Act 1986. The equivalent situation under the 1986 Act would be where the bank, but not the guarantor, knew of the presentation of a bankruptcy petition: see the Insolvency Act 1986 s 284; and BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARAS 217, 504.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(i) Fulfilment of Purpose of the Guarantee/1194. Payment by the guarantor.

1194. Payment by the guarantor.

Payment to the creditor by the guarantor of the guaranteed debt discharges the guarantor<sup>1</sup>. Where the guarantor has other liabilities to the creditor apart from the guarantee, he should make it clear when making any payment to the creditor whether the payment is to be applied to the guarantee liability or not<sup>2</sup>. If the guarantor does not expressly or impliedly appropriate the payment to the guarantee liability, the creditor may exercise his right of appropriation<sup>3</sup>.

Payments made by a guarantor under his guarantee must, unless the guarantee provides otherwise<sup>4</sup>, be set against the liability of the principal debtor. The creditor cannot sue the principal debtor for an amount of the debt which the creditor has already received from a guarantor<sup>5</sup>.

1 As to what constitutes payment by a guarantor see PARAS 1157, 1170.

3 For the principles governing the right to appropriate payments see PARAS 1191-1192.

4 Modern standard forms of guarantee often contain provisions which entitle the creditor to place payments made by the guarantor in a 'suspense', or 'securities realised' account. However, the payment which occurs as a result of the automatic set-off which takes place on the insolvency of the creditor or the guarantor is not something that the creditor can, as it were, place in a suspense account. It operates to reduce or extinguish the liability of the guarantor and necessarily therefore operates as in effect a payment by him to be set against the liability of the principal debtor: MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) [1993] Ch 425 at 447, sub nom MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) (No 2) [1993] 3 All ER 769 at 785, CA, per Dillon LJ.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(ii) Discharge by Agreement/A. EXPRESS AGREEMENT/1195. Discharge by express agreement.

A. EXPRESS AGREEMENT

1195. Discharge by express agreement.

A guarantee, like any other contract, may be discharged by a subsequent agreement<sup>1</sup>. Where only the creditor and the guarantor are parties to the contract of guarantee, and the contract was entered into before 11 May 2000<sup>2</sup>, the mere fact that the guarantee is for the benefit of the principal debtor will not prevent the creditor and the guarantor agreeing without the principal debtor's concurrence to discharge the guarantee<sup>3</sup>. Where, however, the contract is entered into on or after that date, it is not exempted from the provisions of the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act 1999<sup>4</sup>; the principal debtor's consent may thus be required if the statutory tests are met so that he has a right to enforce a term of the contract purporting to confer a benefit on him<sup>5</sup>.

In order to operate as a discharge of the guarantee, the subsequent agreement must<sup>6</sup> itself possess the characteristics of a valid contract. Thus, there must be an agreement made between parties intending to affect their legal relations and having the capacity to contract<sup>7</sup>, and that agreement must either be made as a deed or be supported by sufficient consideration<sup>8</sup>.

1 See eg Barclays Bank Ltd v Thomas [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep 505, where the defence that the guarantee had been released by express agreement failed on the facts. See also Shaw v Royce Ltd [1911] 1 Ch 138, where resolutions passed by the necessary majority of debenture holders which released the guarantor of the debentures were held to be binding on all the debenture holders, including those who were not parties to the release and objected to it. 7 A release by a life tenant of a guarantor's liability for interest on a debt owing to the settlement is effective only to the extent of the life interest: Coates v Coates (1864) 33 Beav 249.

1196. Consideration for release.

Where the contract of guarantee is still executory on both sides, sufficient consideration for the release of the guarantor will always be present, for it will be found in the guarantor's own release of his right to performance or further performance of the contract of guarantee by the creditor<sup>1</sup>. Where, however, the creditor has already fully performed his obligations under the contract of guarantee, his mere promise to release the guarantor will not bind him, unless it is made by deed or supported by some further consideration moving from the guarantor<sup>2</sup>.

A promise to release a guarantee, although not made by deed or supported by consideration, may prevent the creditor from claiming under the guarantee if the promise is enforceable against the creditor under the doctrine of promissory estoppel<sup>3</sup>.

1197. Form of the release.

An agreement releasing a guarantor from his guarantee does not have to be in any particular form, provided that it is sufficiently clear and certain to amount to a contract or other enforceable promise<sup>1</sup>. Even though a guarantee must itself be in writing or be evidenced in writing to be enforceable<sup>2</sup>, it may be released as effectually by a subsequent agreement made orally or by conduct as by a subsequent written agreement<sup>3</sup>. This is so even if the original guarantee was made by deed<sup>4</sup>. However, a mere variation of a guarantee must be in writing or evidenced in writing<sup>5</sup> to be effective<sup>6</sup>.

Sometimes<sup>7</sup> the creditor physically delivers up the guarantee to the guarantor. In the absence of evidence of a contrary intention, the inference from this action is that the guarantee has been treated between the creditor and the guarantor as at an end<sup>8</sup>. However, physical delivery up of a written guarantee is not an essential element of an effective release<sup>9</sup>.

1 See generally the cases cited in notes 3-9. At common law a contract under seal could only be rescinded by an agreement under seal (Kaye v Waghorn (1809) 1 Taunt 428) but this rule was not recognised in equity (Webb v Hewitt (1857) 3 K & J 438) and the equitable rule now prevails: see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 49(1). As from a day to be appointed, the Supreme Court Act 1981 is to be renamed as the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 Pt 1 para 1. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. As to the requirements for an effective release see PARAS 1195-1196.

B. IMPLIED AGREEMENT AND MERGER

1198. Implied release.

Where there is no express agreement to release a guarantee, a release may be implied if the parties have entered into a new contract inconsistent with the previous one<sup>1</sup>. So, for example, a subsequent limited guarantee will impliedly discharge an earlier unlimited guarantee between the same parties for the same indebtedness<sup>2</sup>. However, the implication that the parties intended to release the earlier guarantee may not be justified where the parties to the earlier and later guarantees are not identical<sup>3</sup>; and the express terms of the later guarantee may prevent any implication that the earlier guarantee is released from arising.

5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(ii) Discharge by Agreement/B. IMPLIED AGREEMENT AND MERGER/1199. Merger.

1199. Merger.

On general principles, where a creditor takes from his debtor a security of a higher nature than that which he already possesses (for example if he takes a bond or covenant made by deed) his remedies on the minor security or cause of action are normally merged in the higher remedy by operation of law and are extinguished<sup>1</sup>. So, if the creditor takes from the guarantor a further security such as a deed of charge by way of legal mortgage in lieu of the original simple contract guarantee the original guarantee is thereby discharged<sup>2</sup>.

Since merger depends upon the intention of the parties<sup>3</sup>, it will only occur where the higher security appears to be intended to be taken in lieu of the lower, and not where the parties intended it to be additional or collateral<sup>4</sup>. Whether a particular security was taken in lieu of the original one is mainly a question of fact<sup>5</sup>, to be ascertained from the documents concerned<sup>6</sup> and the surrounding circumstances<sup>7</sup>.

Whether the original security is merged is a question of law<sup>8</sup>. No merger takes place where the securities are of equal degree<sup>9</sup>. Nor will there be a merger unless the higher security is made between the same parties in respect of the same obligation<sup>10</sup>. Where security is given for the amounts due and to become due on a running account, it is doubtful whether there can be any merger of the securities in so far as they apply to future indebtedness<sup>11</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(ii) Discharge by Agreement/C. REVOCATION/1200. Revocation of continuing guarantees.

C. REVOCATION

1200. Revocation of continuing guarantees.

When a guarantee<sup>1</sup> does not expressly provide for its revocation by notice, the question whether it can be so determined mainly depends upon whether the consideration for the guarantor's promise is in its nature entire or divisible<sup>2</sup>. If the consideration is entire, no effectual notice of revocation can be given by the guarantor without the creditor's agreement<sup>3</sup>.

However, in the case of a continuing guarantee, where the consideration is not an entire consideration but the guarantee is given in respect of a continuing indebtedness such as a bank overdraft which may be changed from time to time by increases or decreases in that indebtedness, then in the absence of a provision as to notice the guarantor may terminate the guarantee at any time. If he does so, then he remains responsible for any sums incurred by the principal debtor which are the subject of the guarantee up to the time the notice was given, but he can by giving notice prevent himself from incurring further liability after the date of the notice<sup>4</sup>.

1 Depending upon the circumstances, a 'guarantee' form signed only by the guarantor may amount in law to no more than an offer to guarantee until the creditor, by accepting it, turns it into a contract of guarantee: see PARA 1023 et seq. Such an offer may be revoked at any time before it has been accepted, provided that the revocation is communicated to the creditor: see PARA 1025.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(ii) Discharge by Agreement/C. REVOCATION/1201. Notice provisions.

1201. Notice provisions.

Guarantees given for continuing indebtedness such as a bank overdraft or other running account often expressly provide that they are revocable or determinable only upon the giving of a prescribed period of notice<sup>1</sup>.

In such a case, the guarantor's notice of termination of liability does not take effect until the expiry of the notice period. If during the notice period the principal debtor incurs any further indebtedness which falls within the scope of the guarantee, the guarantor remains responsible and is only released from any further liability upon the expiry of the notice period<sup>2</sup>.

The effect of the expiration of such a notice by the guarantor is merely to prevent future liability accruing under the guarantee. It does not release the guarantor from liability already accrued<sup>3</sup>. However, where the guarantee is only payable on demand and states that the expiration of the notice is not to relieve the guarantor from liability for amounts due under the guarantee at the termination, the guarantor will not be liable unless demand is made prior to expiration of the notice, because nothing is due prior to demand<sup>4</sup>.

1202. Death of principal debtor.

Where the principal's obligation ceases upon his death, the death of the principal debtor before he has committed any default will operate to discharge the guarantor from liability under his guarantee<sup>1</sup>. However, the death of the principal debtor will not usually discharge his estate from liability for debts contracted prior to his death, and so will not usually discharge a guarantor for those debts<sup>2</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(iii) Death of Parties/1203. Death of guarantor.

1203. Death of guarantor.

The death of a guarantor of which the creditor has no notice does not of itself determine the guarantee<sup>1</sup>.

Where the consideration for a guarantee is entire so that the guarantee is from its nature not revocable by the guarantor<sup>2</sup> then, if there is no express stipulation that it may be revoked, notice of the guarantor's death will not terminate the guarantee<sup>3</sup>. Where there is an express stipulation that a period of notice must be given to determine the guarantee, not confined to a notice to be given by the guarantor while still alive, that notice must be given<sup>4</sup>, and mere notice of death will not terminate the guarantee<sup>5</sup>.

In the case of a continuing guarantee, where the consideration is not an entire consideration but the guarantee is given in respect of a continuing indebtedness such as a bank overdraft, the guarantee is from its nature revocable at any time by the guarantor<sup>6</sup>. If such a guarantee does not expressly stipulate that it can only be revoked on notice, or if the stipulated notice can only be given by the guarantor in his lifetime, the guarantee will be revoked as to future transactions under it by notice of his death<sup>7</sup>.

If the stipulated notice can be given by the guarantor's executor, it may in certain cases be treated as given by him at once; for instance, if the principal debtor is the executor and the creditor knows that it is his duty to the estate to terminate the guarantee<sup>8</sup>; but the mere fact that there is notice of death and of the existence of a will does not raise a presumption that there is a breach of trust if the executor fails to give the required notice<sup>9</sup>.

Where notice of the surety's death revokes the guarantee it does not relieve his estate from liability in respect of previous transactions<sup>10</sup>.

The dictum of Bramwell B in Bradbury v Morgan above to the effect that even so the guarantor's estate would be liable is not easy to reconcile with the principle of the decision in Offord v Davies (1862) 12 CBNS 748, coupled with the general rule that an offeror's death, although unknown to the offeree, revokes the offer.

Where a guarantee is joint and several, the death of one co-guarantor does not terminate the liability of the survivors<sup>1</sup>. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(iv) Change of Parties/1205. Change of status of principal debtor.

(iv) Change of Parties

1205. Change of status of principal debtor.

The question whether a change in the status or constitution of the principal debtor discharges a guarantee as to future transactions between the creditor and the principal debtor is primarily a question of construction of the guarantee<sup>1</sup>.

A guarantee which by its terms applies only to the debts of a named individual will not usually be construed to secure debts incurred after that individual enters into a partnership<sup>2</sup>. However, partnership debts may be secured by such a guarantee, if it is clear from the surrounding circumstances that that is what the parties intended<sup>3</sup>.

Where the principal debtor is a partnership, in the absence of agreement to the contrary a continuing guarantee is revoked as to future transactions by any change in the constitution of the partnership<sup>4</sup>.

A guarantee for the debts of a named individual or partnership will not usually be construed to secure debts incurred by a company to which that business is transferred, even if that company is owned and controlled by the original principal debtors: for the company is a separate legal entity from its members, and its debts are not theirs<sup>5</sup>. Nor will a guarantee for the debts of one company normally be construed so as to extend to cover the debts of its parent, subsidiary or sister companies to which its business is transferred on a reconstruction or amalgamation<sup>6</sup>. However, such liabilities may be covered if it is clear that that is what the parties intended<sup>7</sup>. On the same principle that the company and its members are separate legal entities<sup>8</sup>, changes in the ownership or control of a company will not generally determine a continuing guarantee<sup>9</sup>.

Modern standard forms of guarantee usually expressly extend to cover the liability of the principal 'in respect of any transaction whatsoever, either solely or jointly with any other person firm or company'. Cf the cases cited in notes 2-3.

6 See First National Finance Corpn Ltd v Goodman [1983] BCLC 203 at 209 et seq, CA, per Stephenson LJ. There is no general principle that all companies in a group of companies are to be regarded as one. On the contrary, the fundamental principle is that each company in a group of companies is a separate legal entity possessed of separate rights and liabilities: Adams v Cape Industries plc [1990] Ch 433 at 532, [1991] 1 All ER 929 at 1016, CA, citing Albacruz (Cargo Owners) v Albazero (Owners), The Albazero [1977] AC 774 at 807, [1975] 3 All ER 21 at 28, CA, per Roskill LJ (decision revsd on appeal [1977] AC 774 at 840 et seq, [1976] 3 All ER 129, HL).

8 See the text and note 5.

9 So eg in First National Finance Corpn Ltd v Goodman [1983] BCLC 203, CA, the guarantor was held liable for advances made to the principal debtor company after he had ceased to be either a director of it or a shareholder in it.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(iv) Change of Parties/1206. Change of creditor's status.

1206. Change of creditor's status.

The question whether a change in the status or constitution of the creditor discharges a guarantee as to future transactions between the creditor and the principal debtor is primarily a question of construction of the guarantee<sup>1</sup>.

Unless the parties have agreed otherwise, any change in the identity of the creditor terminates the liability of a guarantor under a continuing guarantee in respect of future transactions<sup>2</sup>. So, for example, where the creditor is a partnership, in the absence of agreement to the contrary a continuing guarantee is revoked as to future transactions by any change in the constitution of the partnership<sup>3</sup>. Similarly, the subsequent incorporation of a voluntary society or private partnership to which a guarantee is given will generally terminate the guarantor's liability as to future transactions under it<sup>4</sup>; and except where an amalgamation or consolidation of two companies is effected by a statute which expressly or impliedly preserves rights against a guarantor<sup>5</sup>, a guarantee given to either of those companies is generally invalidated as to future transactions by that amalgamation or consolidation<sup>6</sup>.

However, it is open to the parties to agree otherwise. So a guarantee expressed to be in favour of a bank, its successors and assigns and any company with which it may amalgamate, will cover advances made by a successor bank with which it has amalgamated and to which its assets and undertaking have been transferred<sup>7</sup>. Even where there is no express agreement, guarantors may become estopped from denying their continuing liability following a reconstruction of the creditor company<sup>8</sup>.

A mere change in the name of the creditor company by which the rights of the creditor and the obligations of the guarantor are not altered will not release the guarantor from liability<sup>9</sup>.

See also Eastern Union Rly Co v Cochrane (1853) 9 Exch 197. Where an amalgamation takes place of the firm to which a guarantee was given with some other body, rendering the guarantee inoperative as to future transactions under it, the guarantor's liability under the guarantee in respect of past transactions must be enforced by the persons to whom the guarantee was originally given, unless the cause of action has been assigned to the new body: Lloyd's v Harper (1880) 16 ChD 290, CA; Moller v Lambert (1810) 2 Camp 548; and see PARA 1124.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(v) The Consumer Credit Act 1974/1209. Relief where creditor/debtor relationship unfair.

1209. Relief where creditor/debtor relationship unfair.

If the court determines that the relationship between the creditor and debtor arising out of a credit agreement<sup>1</sup>, or such agreement taken with any related agreement<sup>2</sup>, is unfair to the debtor because of any terms of the agreement or related agreement, the way in which the creditor has exercised or enforced any of his rights under the agreement or related agreement or any other thing done or not done by or on behalf of the creditor either before or after the making of the agreement or related agreement<sup>3</sup>, it may make an appropriate order in connection with the agreement<sup>4</sup>. Such an order may be made only on an application made by the debtor or by a surety<sup>5</sup>, at the instance of the debtor or a surety in any proceedings in any court to which the debtor and the creditor are parties, being proceedings to enforce the agreement or any related agreement, or at the instance of the debtor or a surety in any other proceedings in any court where the amount paid or payable under the agreement or any related agreement is relevant<sup>6</sup>. Such an order may be made notwithstanding that its effect is to place on the creditor, or any associate or former associate of his, a burden in respect of an advantage enjoyed by another person<sup>7</sup>.

Provisions in the Insolvency Act 1986 enable a trustee in bankruptcy to seek relief from the court in respect of extortionate credit transactions entered into by the bankrupt not more than three years before the commencement of the bankruptcy<sup>8</sup>.

1 In the context of the provisions relating to unfair relationships, 'credit agreement' means an agreement between an individual (the 'debtor') and any other person (the 'creditor'), by which the creditor provides the debtor with credit of any amount: see the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s 140C(1) (ss 140A-140C added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 ss 19-21); and CONSUMER CREDIT. As to references to the creditor or debtor under a credit agreement see the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s 140C(2) (as so added); and CONSUMER CREDIT. As to the definition of 'individual' for this purpose see s 189(1) (definition as substituted); and CONSUMER CREDIT. As to the computation of the total charge for credit see s 20(1); the Consumer Credit (Total Charge for Credit) Regulations 1980, SI 1980/51; and CONSUMER CREDIT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARAS 224-225.

2 As to references to an agreement related to a credit agreement see the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s 140C(4), (5), (7), (8) (as added: see note 1); and CONSUMER CREDIT.

3 See the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s 140A(1) (as added: see note 1); and CONSUMER CREDIT. In deciding whether to make such a determination the court must have regard to all matters it thinks relevant (including matters relating to the creditor and matters relating to the debtor): see s 140A(2) (as so added). For these purposes the court must (except to the extent that it is not appropriate to do so) treat anything done (or not done) by, or on behalf of, or in relation to, an associate or a former associate of the creditor as if done (or not done) by, or on behalf of, or in relation to, the creditor: see s 140A(3) (as so added). Such a determination may be made in relation to a relationship notwithstanding that the relationship may have ended: see s 140A(4) (as so added). An order under s 140B must not be made in connection with a credit agreement which is an exempt agreement by virtue of s 16(6C): see s 140A(5) (as so added). See generally CONSUMER CREDIT.

4 See the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s 140B (as added: see note 1); and CONSUMER CREDIT. Such an order may include doing one or more of the following: (1) requiring the creditor, or any associate or former associate of his, to repay (in whole or in part) any sum paid by the debtor or by a surety by virtue of the agreement or any related agreement (whether paid to the creditor, the associate or the former associate or to any other person); (2) requiring the creditor, or any associate or former associate of his, to do or not to do (or to cease doing) anything specified in the order in connection with the agreement or any related agreement; (3) reducing or discharging any sum payable by the debtor or by a surety by virtue of the agreement or any related agreement; (4) directing the return to a surety of any property provided by him for the purposes of a security; (5) otherwise setting aside (in whole or in part) any duty imposed on the debtor or on a surety by virtue of the agreement or any related agreement; (6) altering the terms of the agreement or of any related agreement: see s 140B(1)(a)-(f) (as so added); and CONSUMER CREDIT. As to the meaning of 'surety' for these purposes see PARA 1208 note 8, but see also s 140C(6) (as added: see note 1).

5 See note 4.

6 See the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s 140B(2) (as added: see note 1); and CONSUMER CREDIT. A party to any such proceedings is entitled, in accordance with rules of court, to have any person who might be the subject of such an order made a party to the proceedings: see s 140B(8) (as so added); and CONSUMER CREDIT. The application may only be made in England and Wales to the county court: see ss 140B(4), 140C(3) (as so added). If, in any such proceedings, the debtor or a surety alleges that the relationship between the creditor and the debtor is unfair to the debtor, it is for the creditor to prove to the contrary: see s 140B(9) (as so added); and CONSUMER CREDIT.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(v) The Consumer Credit Act 1974/1210. Restrictions on enforcement of security.

1210. Restrictions on enforcement of security.

The creditor under a regulated agreement<sup>1</sup> under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 is obliged, subject to certain conditions including the payment of a small fee, to provide the surety<sup>2</sup> under any security<sup>3</sup> given for that agreement upon written request with a copy of the executed agreement, a copy of the security instrument<sup>4</sup>, and details of the state of accounts between the creditor and the debtor<sup>5</sup>. If the creditor or owner fails to comply with this obligation, he is not entitled while the default continues to enforce the security<sup>6</sup>.

Where the creditor or owner serves a default notice<sup>7</sup> under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 on the debtor or hirer, he must also serve a copy on any surety<sup>8</sup>. If the creditor or owner fails to comply with this obligation, he may only enforce his security against the guarantor on an order of the court<sup>9</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vi) Discharge by Operation of Law/1211. Failure of consideration.

(vi) Discharge by Operation of Law

1211. Failure of consideration.

Total failure of the consideration<sup>1</sup> for the guarantor's promise of guarantee will discharge him, and affords a good defence to a claim by the creditor against the guarantor. Thus, for example, a guarantor will be discharged where the consideration for his guarantee is a postponement, with the consent of the execution creditor, of a sheriff's sale, and notwithstanding such consent the sale takes place<sup>2</sup>. So also a guarantor for payment of a composition to creditors will be discharged where the debtor is made bankrupt and the composition annulled<sup>3</sup>; or where the composition is expressed to require the assent of all creditors and this is not forthcoming<sup>4</sup>.

By contrast, it was held that where a bank issued a letter of credit permitting a company to draw bills upon it in consideration of the company's undertaking to do certain things with a view to providing means for the meeting of the bills when they became due, guarantors for the fulfilment of the undertaking were not discharged from liability under their guarantee on the ground of failure of consideration where, owing to the subsequent failure of the bank, after accepting the bills, the company wrongfully refused to carry out its undertaking and the bills were, partly in consequence of the refusal, not met at maturity<sup>5</sup>.

1 As to the consideration for a contract of guarantee see PARA 1047 et seq; and as to what constitutes total failure of consideration and its effects in relation to contracts generally see CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 992. It may be more accurate to say that the guarantor was not bound by the guarantee in the first place.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vi) Discharge by Operation of Law/1212. Material alteration of guarantee.

1212. Material alteration of guarantee.

An immaterial alteration, such as the correction of an innocent misdescription of the principal debtor or the insertion of details of the guarantor's service agent, will not prevent the guarantee being enforceable, even if the alteration is made after signature and the guarantor does not assent to the alteration being made<sup>1</sup>.

However, a material alteration, not approved by all the parties to the original document, will avoid the guarantee<sup>2</sup>. A material alteration is one which has an effect on some contract or right contained in or arising out of the instrument itself<sup>3</sup>. So a guarantee could be discharged by its conversion into a deed<sup>4</sup>, or by the striking out of the names of persons who are co-guarantors<sup>5</sup>, or by the addition, after its execution, of words reducing to a less amount the liability of one of several joint and several guarantors for a given sum each<sup>6</sup>.

Even if the unauthorised alterations were made by a stranger, they will invalidate the guarantee if they were made while the altered document was in the creditor's custody, for, so long as it is in the creditor's possession, he is bound to preserve it in its original state<sup>7</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vi) Discharge by Operation of Law/1213. Effect of foreign law discharging guarantor.

1213. Effect of foreign law discharging guarantor.

The question whether a contract such as a contract of guarantee has been validly discharged is determined by the proper law of the contract<sup>1</sup>. In the case of most contracts made after 1 April 1991 the question of which law is to govern the obligations of the parties will be answered by the rules of the Rome Convention signed by the United Kingdom on 7 December 1981<sup>2</sup>.

It follows that the provisions of a foreign law relieving a guarantor from obligations under a contract of guarantee governed by English law cannot be relied upon in the English courts so as to enable him to avoid those obligations<sup>3</sup>.

1 Where a reference is made to the 'proper law of the contract' this means the law which governs the contract as it is determined by the provisions of the Convention on the Law Applicable to Contractual Obligations (Rome, 19 June 1980; Cmnd 8449) (the 'Rome Convention'), as introduced into the United Kingdom by the Contracts (Applicable Law) Act 1989. As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 2 note 3. For this reason, it is now common to use the expression 'applicable law' instead of 'proper law'. See CONFLICT OF LAWS vol 8(3) (Reissue) PARA 349 note 7.

5TH EDITION, PARAS 1620-2586)/4. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/A. EQUITABLE PROTECTION OF THE GUARANTOR/1214. The principle.

(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor

A. EQUITABLE PROTECTION OF THE GUARANTOR

1214. The principle.

Equity intervenes to protect a guarantor<sup>1</sup>. To protect the guarantor's right to pay the guaranteed debt and after paying it to sue the principal debtor in the name of the creditor<sup>2</sup>, a guarantor is discharged if the creditor, without his consent, either releases the principal debtor<sup>3</sup> or enters into a binding arrangement with him to give him time without reserving his rights against the guarantor<sup>4</sup>. Since, by virtue of the guarantee, a guarantor is as much concerned in every transaction with the principal debtor affecting the guaranteed liability as the creditor, any variation of the principal contract made without his consent discharges him from his guarantee, unless the variation is clearly insubstantial or obviously cannot prejudice him<sup>5</sup>.

To protect the guarantor's right on paying the guaranteed debt to have the benefit of all the securities which the creditor had<sup>6</sup>, a guarantor is discharged<sup>7</sup> if the creditor without the guarantor's consent fails to make that security properly available to the guarantor<sup>8</sup>. To protect the guarantor's right to contribution from co-guarantors<sup>9</sup>, the guarantor is discharged<sup>10</sup> if the creditor without the guarantor's consent releases any co-guarantor<sup>11</sup>.

A guarantor will also be discharged if the creditor acts in bad faith towards him<sup>12</sup>, or connives at the default by the principal debtor in respect of which the guarantee is given<sup>13</sup>. However, there is no general principle that merely irregular conduct on the part of the creditor, even if prejudicial to the interest of the guarantor, discharges the guarantor<sup>14</sup>.

GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/A. EQUITABLE PROTECTION OF THE GUARANTOR/1215. The nature of the guarantor's rights.

1215. The nature of the guarantor's rights.

The obligations of the guarantor arise out of contract. The rights of the guarantor, in general, are the creatures of equity<sup>1</sup>. Equity protects the guarantor by providing him in certain circumstances with a defence in whole or part to the creditor's claims against him under the guarantee<sup>2</sup>; and, in that sense, it confers upon the guarantor certain rights and imposes upon the creditor certain duties. But it does not provide the guarantor with an independent cause of action against the creditor for damages for infringement of the rights or breach of the duties thereby conferred<sup>3</sup>. Moreover, the existence of these equitable rights and duties is inconsistent with the existence between the creditor and the guarantor of a general duty of care actionable in the tort of negligence<sup>4</sup>.

Nevertheless, these equitable principles only supplement, and do not replace, the contractual rights which the guarantor would in any event have at law. So, for example, a guarantor will also be discharged where the creditor commits a repudiatory breach of the contract of guarantee<sup>5</sup>, or fails to observe a non-promissory condition of the contract<sup>6</sup>. It follows that a guarantor may claim damages against the creditor for any breach of the express or implied terms of the guarantee<sup>7</sup>.

B. EXCLUSION OF THE GUARANTOR'S RIGHTS*1216. Terms of the guarantee.

Contracts of guarantee often contain provisions which entitle the creditor to vary the principal contract, give time to or release the principal debtor, release security or other guarantors, or otherwise act in a way which would discharge the guarantor in equity<sup>1</sup>, while nevertheless preserving the guarantor's liability under the guarantee. Such provisions, if on their true construction they cover the events which have happened<sup>2</sup>, are effective to preserve the guarantor's liability to the creditor<sup>3</sup>.

Provisions of this kind in a contract of guarantee, which merely negate the equitable protections that the guarantor would otherwise enjoy, are probably outside the ambit of the Unfair Contract Terms Act 1977<sup>4</sup>. However, to the extent that the terms of the guarantee go further and seek to exclude the creditor's liability for a breach of contract<sup>5</sup> or of a common law duty<sup>6</sup>, they will be subject to the 1977 Act<sup>7</sup>.

1 See PARA 1214.

2 Eg in Dowling v Ditanda Ltd (1975) 236 Estates Gazette 485, Oliver J held that the terms of the guarantee preserving the guarantor's liability were (arguably) not wide enough to cover a surrender of the leasehold interest which formed the security for the principal debt, where the guarantee also contained an express provision for the transfer of the charge to the guarantor if he paid the money outstanding under the charge and the surrender constituted a breach of that term. In Burnes v Trade Credits Ltd [1981] 2 All ER 122, [1981] 1 WLR 805, PC, clauses extending the guarantee to cover 'any further advance' and entitling the creditor to grant time 'or any other indulgence or consideration' to the principal debtor, were held not to permit an increase in the rate of interest granted as the price of an extension of time for payment of the principal sum. Cf Croydon Commercial Gas Co v Dickinson (1876) 1 CPD 707; on appeal (1876) 2 CPD 46, CA, where a clause permitting the creditor to extend a 14-day period of credit was held not to authorise an extension granted after the 14-day period had already expired; and Trade Indemnity Co Ltd v Workington Harbour and Dock Board [1937] AC 1 at 21, [1936] 1 All ER 454 at 463, HL, per Lord Atkin, where a clause authorising 'alteration' was held not to permit fundamental changes to the nature or location of the guaranteed works.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/B. EXCLUSION OF THE GUARANTOR'S RIGHTS/1217. Principal debtor clauses.

1217. Principal debtor clauses.

Guarantees also often contain a provision constituting the guarantor a principal debtor<sup>1</sup>. This may sometimes be in the form of a clause stating that the creditor is to be at liberty to act as though the guarantor were a principal debtor, for the purpose of waiving such of guarantor's rights as would be inconsistent with that status<sup>2</sup>. Sometimes, the clause states that any money not recoverable from the guarantor as a guarantor shall nevertheless be recoverable from him as sole or principal debtor in respect of it, for the purpose of preserving the guarantor's liability should the principal obligation be void or unenforceable for any reason<sup>3</sup>.

A principal debtor clause of the first type will, if appropriately worded, be effective to preserve the liability of the guarantor in circumstances where the guarantor would otherwise have been discharged in equity<sup>4</sup>. Such a clause will not usually convert what is in reality a guarantee into an indemnity, so as to preserve the guarantor's liability in the event that the principal obligation is void or unenforceable<sup>5</sup>. However, depending upon its wording, it may do so, either generally or upon the happening of certain events<sup>6</sup>.

1 As to the potential effect of the inclusion of such a clause on such matters as the need for a demand (see PARA 1105), set-off in insolvency (see PARA 1126), and the accrual of the cause of action for the purposes of limitation (see PARA 1181) see Esso Petroleum Co Ltd v Alstonbridge Properties Ltd [1975] 3 All ER 358 at 366-367, [1975] 1 WLR 1474 at 1483 per Walton J; National Westminster Bank plc v Skelton [1993] 1 All ER 242 at 251, [1993] 1 WLR 72n at 80, CA, per Slade LJ; MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) [1993] Ch 425, sub nom MS Fashions Ltd v Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (in liquidation) (No 2) [1993] 3 All ER 769, CA; and cf Tate v Crewdson [1938] Ch 869, [1938] 3 All ER 43.

The actual decision in Coutts & Co v Browne-Lecky has now been reversed by statute: see the Minors' Contracts Act 1987 s 2; and PARA 1030. See also Coutts & Co v Stock [2000] 2 All ER 56 at 64-65, obiter per Lightman J (the clearest language is required to impose on a guarantor liabilities of the principal debtor in cases where statute has decreed that the liabilities of the principal debtor are to be void).

6 See General Produce Co v United Bank Ltd [1979] 2 Lloyd's Rep 255, where Lloyd J held that a short clause declaring that 'my/our liability hereunder shall be as that of principal debtors' had the effect of turning the signatory into a principal debtor, not from the start, but in certain events, such as the principal debtor ceasing to be liable, and stated that although a principal debtor clause did not automatically convert every guarantee into an indemnity, its operation was not to be confined to the consequences of giving time or other indulgence to the principal debtor.

C. RELEASE OF THE PRINCIPAL DEBTOR

1218. The principle.

A guarantor is discharged if the creditor, without his consent<sup>1</sup>, unconditionally<sup>2</sup> releases the principal debtor<sup>3</sup>. The reason for this principle is sometimes stated to be simply that the release extinguishes the principal obligation<sup>4</sup>. It is also sometimes put on the basis that the guarantor's right to pay the guaranteed debt and after paying it to sue the principal debtor in the name of the creditor<sup>5</sup> is thereby interfered with<sup>6</sup>. Another, perhaps inconsistent, reason sometimes given for the rule is that it would be a fraud on the principal debtor for the creditor to release him from liability if the creditor were then able to proceed against the guarantor, who, in his turn, might sue the principal debtor and thus render the alleged release nugatory<sup>7</sup>.

The creditor's acceptance of the principal debtor's repudiatory breach of the principal contract, although it has the effect of discharging the principal debtor from his primary obligation further to perform the principal contract, is not a release of the principal debtor for the purposes of this principle: for there is substituted by law a secondary obligation upon the principal debtor, also arising from the principal contract, to pay to the creditor a sum of money to compensate him for the loss which he has sustained as a result of the failure to perform the primary obligation<sup>8</sup>.

1 The guarantee will often contain provisions designed to preserve the liability of the guarantor in these circumstances. Such provisions, if appropriately worded, are effective: see PARAS 1216-1217.

2 The guarantor may not be released if the 'release' of the principal debtor takes the form of a mere covenant not to sue, or is made subject to the creditor's express reservation of his rights against the guarantor: see PARA 1222.

1219. Express release.

A guarantor is discharged where a release to the principal debtor is executed, even by one only of two partners to whom the guarantee is given, if it is in pursuance of an agreement with the principal debtor entered into by both partners<sup>1</sup>. A voluntary deed releasing the principal debtor in like manner as if he had obtained his discharge in bankruptcy frees the guarantor<sup>2</sup>, as does also the execution by the creditor, as a trustee, of a deed of assignment releasing the principal debtor<sup>3</sup>, unless (1) the guarantee otherwise provides<sup>4</sup>; or (2) the deed releasing the principal debtor itself contains a reservation of remedies against the guarantor<sup>5</sup>, thereby reducing it to a mere covenant not to sue<sup>6</sup>.

A guarantor for payment of a composition to creditors is discharged from liability to a particular creditor who, without his knowledge or consent, obtains from the compounding debtor an agreement binding the compounding debtor to pay the creditor's debt in full, as such a transaction avoids both the original debt and the composition<sup>7</sup>.

When the release of the principal debtor by the creditor is accomplished by means of a fraud on the part of the principal debtor<sup>1</sup>, the guarantor, if he has given no consideration, is not discharged even though he is no party to the fraud, upon the general principle that a volunteer cannot avail himself of what has been obtained by the fraud of another<sup>2</sup>.

1221. Release may be implied.

A guarantor is also discharged from liability where the release of the principal debtor is not express, but results as a legal consequence from some transaction. Thus, a guarantor for payment of instalments under a hire purchase agreement is discharged if, before having recourse to him, the creditor seizes the goods and thereby determines the agreement<sup>1</sup>. He is also discharged by the acceptance by the creditor of a second security in discharge of the original one<sup>2</sup>, or by the substitution of a security for the personal liability of the principal debtor<sup>3</sup>. However, the mere acceptance of additional security from the principal debtor will not have this effect<sup>4</sup> unless there is an agreement to give time or the intention of the parties is manifestly that the original security is not to remain in force<sup>5</sup>.

A mere covenant not to sue the principal debtor will not discharge the guarantor, especially if it is qualified by an express reservation of remedies against the guarantor<sup>1</sup>. But there can be no effectual reservation of rights against a guarantor where the transaction between the creditor and the principal debtor amounts to a novation<sup>2</sup> or satisfaction of the debt guaranteed, and is accompanied by a release to the principal debtor from further liability, whether past or future<sup>3</sup>.

1223. When guarantor is not discharged by release of principal debtor.

A release of the principal debtor by the creditor will not discharge the guarantor if he has ceased to be a guarantor and become himself a principal debtor<sup>1</sup>, or has previously paid part of the debt and given a security for the remainder<sup>2</sup>, or has, in consideration of an extension of time to himself by the creditor, bound himself without the principal debtor's concurrence, to pay the whole sum for which he was originally guarantor only<sup>3</sup>, or has expressly agreed to remain liable, so that there is then no ground for the presumption that he is impliedly discharged<sup>4</sup>.

Moreover, where the whole guaranteed debt has not been discharged the guarantor may, where the guarantee is appropriately drafted, remain liable in respect of the undischarged balance even though the principal debtor has, to that extent, been released by the creditor<sup>5</sup>.

D. GIVING TIME TO THE PRINCIPAL DEBTOR

1224. The principle.

A guarantor is discharged if the creditor, without his consent<sup>1</sup>, and without expressly reserving his rights against the guarantor<sup>2</sup>, enters into a binding arrangement<sup>3</sup> with the principal debtor to give him time to perform the principal obligation<sup>4</sup>. Different reasons, given by different judges, may be found for this principle<sup>5</sup>. The main reason is usually stated to be that the guarantor's right at any time to require the creditor to call upon the principal debtor to pay off the guaranteed debt<sup>6</sup>, or himself to pay the debt and after paying it to sue the principal debtor in the name of the creditor<sup>7</sup>, is thereby interfered with<sup>8</sup>. Another, though inconsistent, reason sometimes given for the rule is that it would be a fraud on the principal debtor if the creditor, after making such an agreement, were able to sue the guarantor because the guarantor could then claim from the principal debtor in breach of the agreement to give time<sup>9</sup>.

Under this principle, the guarantor is released whether or not he is prejudiced by the giving of time<sup>10</sup>. The release extends not only to the guarantor's personal liability but also to any security he has given<sup>11</sup>.

1 The guarantee will often expressly authorise the creditor to give time to the principal debtor without discharging the guarantor. Such provisions, if appropriately worded, are effective to preserve the guarantor's liability: see PARAS 1216-1217.

There are dicta in Croydon Commercial Gas Co v Dickinson (1876) 2 CPD 46 at 51, CA, per Amphlett JA, which suggest that the ordinary rule concerning variations (that they will not discharge the guarantor where they are clearly insubstantial or obviously cannot prejudice him: see PARA 1235 text and note 8) can be applied to cases of giving time. However, the consensus of authority is to the effect that the rule regarding the giving of time is absolute: 'though this seems, if it may be permitted to speak in such terms of the doctrine sanctioned by very great lawyers, consistent neither with justice nor common sense, it has been long so firmly established that it can only be altered by the legislature': Swire v Redman and Holt above at 542.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/D. GIVING TIME TO THE PRINCIPAL DEBTOR/1225. When the principle is applicable.

1225. When the principle is applicable.

The principle set out in the previous paragraph applies only to cases where, at the moment when the agreement to give time is made, the parties occupy the relation of creditor, principal debtor and guarantor<sup>1</sup>. The giving of time will not discharge someone who is not a guarantor but merely occupies a position of secondary liability<sup>2</sup>.

A guarantor will be discharged under this principle, whether he originally contracted with the creditor as a guarantor, or originally contracted as a co-debtor and only became a guarantor by subsequent agreement between himself and his co-debtor<sup>3</sup>, provided that the creditor had notice of the guarantee at the time the agreement to give time was made<sup>4</sup>. Conversely, the principle will not apply to discharge a person who, although he originally contracted as a guarantor, had entered into an arrangement with the creditor by which he became a principal debtor prior to the giving of time<sup>5</sup>.

1226. The binding arrangement.

The agreement giving time must be really binding and capable of enforcement<sup>1</sup>, for valuable consideration<sup>2</sup> and made with the principal debtor<sup>3</sup>; and it must actually give time<sup>4</sup>. An agreement that if the creditor forbears to require due repayment of a loan the debtor will thereafter pay a higher rate of interest is not an agreement to give time if the creditor retains the option as to whether or not he will require such repayment<sup>5</sup>. The agreement to give time need not, however, be express<sup>6</sup>, and may be written or oral, whether the guaranteed contract is made by deed<sup>7</sup> or not.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/D. GIVING TIME TO THE PRINCIPAL DEBTOR/1227. What constitutes giving time.

1227. What constitutes giving time.

The making of a new and valid contract, to which the guarantor does not assent, between the creditor and the principal debtor which extends the period at which, by the original contract between them, the principal debtor was obliged to pay the creditor amounts to a giving of time<sup>1</sup>. Thus, to substitute for payment in one sum payment by instalments amounts to a giving of time<sup>2</sup>. Again, whenever the taking of a new security from the principal debtor by the creditor operates as a giving of time, the guarantor is no longer liable<sup>3</sup>, but not where that transaction has no such effect<sup>4</sup>. The guarantor has been held to be discharged where an action of replevin was by agreement referred to arbitration, and, without the consent or privity of the guarantor in the replevin bond, the time for making the award was enlarged<sup>5</sup>, or where the creditor sued the principal debtor by direction of the guarantor, but without his knowledge agreed to stay execution<sup>6</sup>. Where a bill has been accepted to the knowledge of the holder for another's accommodation, the acceptor will be discharged if the holder gives time to the party accommodated<sup>7</sup>. The doctrine that where time is given to the principal debtor the guarantor is discharged also applies where the guarantee arises under a promissory note<sup>8</sup>.

If there is no binding agreement to give time, mere omission on the creditor's part to press the principal debtor for payment will not discharge the guarantor<sup>1</sup>, even if the debtor subsequently becomes insolvent<sup>2</sup>, unless the creditor is bound to use the utmost efforts to obtain payment from the principal debtor before suing the guarantor<sup>3</sup>.

1229. Trade custom does not justify giving time.

The custom of a trade does not justify the creditor in agreeing to give time to the principal debtor<sup>1</sup>. In the case, however, of a general guarantee against loss in a course of dealing the guarantor is not, apparently, discharged by the creditor taking a bill at one month from the principal debtor in payment of an account for goods supplied, as the principal debtor and creditor are free to arrange the details of their transaction as they see fit, provided these are not at variance with the ordinary custom of merchants<sup>2</sup>.

1230. Continuing guarantees and severable contracts.

In the case of a continuing guarantee, an agreement to give time may only partially relieve the guarantor from liability. Thus, one supply of goods to the principal debtor under such a guarantee at a longer credit than the guarantor has stipulated for will not relieve the guarantor from liability in respect of a past or subsequent supply at the prescribed credit<sup>1</sup>; and where a contract is severable in character, a guarantor for its performance will still be liable for the fulfilment of so much of the contract as is not affected by the agreement to give time<sup>2</sup>.

Even where there is a binding agreement to give time to the principal debtor, the guarantor is not discharged<sup>1</sup> if the remedies against him are expressly reserved<sup>2</sup>, with or without his consent or knowledge<sup>3</sup>. Such reservation of remedies may normally be expected to appear on the face of the agreement giving time<sup>4</sup>, but sometimes the reservation can be proved by oral evidence<sup>5</sup>, although not if such evidence varies the instrument giving time<sup>6</sup>.

1232. When guarantor is not discharged by giving of time.

An agreement between the creditor and the principal debtor that the creditor will not enforce his remedy against the principal debtor until a particular date does not discharge the guarantor if the date in question is earlier than the date when the creditor would otherwise have enforced his remedy<sup>1</sup>. Moreover, a guarantor is not discharged by an agreement giving time where he has himself agreed not to require the principal debtor to relieve him until he has himself been sued<sup>2</sup>, and, apparently, an extension of time to the principal debtor permitted by court order, though with the creditor's consent, will not discharge the guarantor<sup>3</sup>. Again, an agreement to give time to the principal debtor will not discharge a guarantor if it is made after the creditor has obtained judgment against the principal debtor and the guarantor<sup>4</sup>, or against the guarantor alone<sup>5</sup>, or after the guarantor has by agreement with the creditor converted himself into a debtor<sup>6</sup>, or if he has agreed in his guarantee<sup>7</sup> or in some other way that time may with impunity be given to the principal debtor<sup>8</sup>, or if he subsequently confirms the agreement giving time<sup>9</sup>.

A binding agreement by the creditor with the principal debtor, made without the guarantor's consent, to give time to the guarantor discharges the guarantor, as its effect is to alter prejudicially his position by tying the creditor's hands from receiving payment from the guarantor and so enabling the guarantor to sue the principal debtor<sup>1</sup>.

1234. Agreement by creditor with guarantor giving time.

A creditor may compound with and give time to a guarantor, or take security from him, without discharging co-guarantors or the principal debtor<sup>1</sup>. Moreover, where by separate contract with the guarantor, made on good consideration and without the concurrence of the principal debtor, the creditor gives the guarantor further time for payment of a bill of exchange accepted by the guarantor, and afterwards the principal debtor is released from his debt by the creditor, the guarantor is not discharged from liability<sup>2</sup>.

On the other hand, where there are two co-guarantors and the creditor, after granting a further loan to the principal debtor and taking a new security from him for that and the former loan, gives further time to him and one of the guarantors only without specially reserving the remedy against the other guarantor, that other guarantor is discharged<sup>3</sup>.

F. OTHER VARIATIONS OF THE PRINCIPAL CONTRACT

1235. The principle.

When considering the effect upon the liability of a guarantor of an agreement between the creditor and the principal debtor to vary the principal contract, the construction of the contract of guarantee is of critical importance, because it is vital to identify the precise nature of the obligation or obligations guaranteed<sup>1</sup>.

Where the obligations are those arising under a specific contract between debtor and creditor<sup>2</sup>, the terms of the contract giving rise to the obligations guaranteed may sometimes be embodied or incorporated<sup>3</sup> expressly or impliedly<sup>4</sup> in the contract of guarantee<sup>5</sup>. If in such a case the creditor, without the guarantor's consent<sup>6</sup>, enters into a binding agreement<sup>7</sup> which varies the principal contract in a way which is not manifestly insubstantial or incapable of prejudicing the guarantor<sup>8</sup>, the guarantor will be discharged from his obligations under the contract of guarantee<sup>9</sup>. This general rule is subject to the qualification that where the guarantee is for the performance of several and distinct contracts or duties, a change in one of those contracts or duties will not affect the guarantor's liability as to the rest<sup>10</sup>. Hence a guarantor may be liable for a default which occurred before the variation of the principal contract.

Where on the other hand the guarantee is given in respect of obligations arising out of a contemplated course of dealing without incorporating, expressly or impliedly, the terms of any specific contract, it is open to the creditor to vary the terms applying to the course of dealing so long as that course of dealing remains within the scope of the guarantee<sup>11</sup>.

However, see the comments of Scott LJ in [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365 at 375-376, cited in note 5. For a more recent example of a case where there was a dispute on the facts as to whether a loan agreement had been varied without the guarantor's consent, so as to discharge him, see Lloyds TSB Bank plc v Hayward [2002] EWCA Civ 1813, [2002] All ER (D) 161 (Dec), where the Court of Appeal ordered a retrial.

2 This may be evident from the terms of the contract of guarantee itself, where specific reference is made to the contract giving rise to the obligations guaranteed, or from a consideration of the circumstances surrounding the conclusion of the contract of guarantee, where these show that a specific contract was the subject matter of the guarantee: City of London v New Hampshire Insurance Co (18 January 1991, unreported), QBD, but summarised at (1991) 3 JIBFL 144; revsd on the particular facts of the case sub nom Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co [1992] 3 All ER 57n, sub nom Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co [1992] 1 WLR 792n, [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365, CA. 3 Where the terms of the principal contract are incorporated into the contract of guarantee, any breach of them constitutes a breach of the guarantee itself: Glyn v Hertel (1818) 8 Taunt 208; Garrett v Handley (1825) 4 B & C 664; Holme v Brunskill (1878) 3 QBD 495, CA; Bacon v Chesney (1816) 1 Stark 192; Blest v Brown (1862) 3 Giff 450; on appeal 4 De GF & J 367; Whitcher v Hall (1826) 5 B & C 269; Holme v Brunskill above at 505 per Cotton LJ. For the effect of breaches of the principal contract see PARA 1242 et seq.

4 The terms of the principal contract will not be treated as impliedly embodied in the guarantee if those terms have not been finalised at the date the guarantee is given: Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co as reported in [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365 at 370, CA, per Parker LJ, and at 371 per Nolan LJ.

5 Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co as reported in [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365, CA. However, in Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co at 375-376, Scott LJ expressed the view that it was unhelpful to speak of the terms of the principal contract being 'embodied' in the guarantee, and that the vital question in deciding whether the guarantor was discharged by a variation was whether that variation altered the risk that the guarantor had contracted to undertake.

6 The guarantee will often expressly authorise the creditor to vary the principal obligation without discharging the guarantor. Such provisions, if appropriately worded, are effective to preserve the guarantor's liability: see PARAS 1216-1217. It is for the creditor to prove that the guarantor has consented: Provincial Bank of Ireland v Fisher [1919] 2 IR 249, HL. See generally PARA 1241.

8 The court will not embark on an inquiry if the insubstantial nature and lack of prejudice to the guarantor is not self-evident: Holme v Brunskill (1878) 3 QBD 495 at 505, CA. See also Rees v Berrington (1795) 2 Ves 540 at 543 per Lord Loughborough LC ('I cannot try the cause by inquiring what mischief it might have done; for that would go into a vast variety of speculation, upon which no sound principle could be built'); Hollier v Eyre (1840) 9 Cl & Fin 1 at 57, HL, per Lord Cottenham; Newton v Chorlton (1853) 2 Drew 333 at 339 per Page Wood V-C; Polak v Everett (1876) 1 QBD 669 at 674, 677, CA; Re Darwen and Pearce [1927] 1 Ch 176. ### 1236. Basis of the principle.

The basis of the principle that a guarantor is discharged by an agreement between the creditor and the principal debtor which has the effect of varying the guarantee, is that it is the clearest and most evident equity not to carry on any transaction without the privity of the guarantor, who must necessarily have a concern in every transaction with the principal debtor<sup>1</sup>, and who cannot as guarantor be made liable for default in the performance of a contract which is not the one the fulfilment of which he has guaranteed<sup>2</sup>.

1237. Particular variations.

A guarantor for payment of a composition to creditors by the principal debtor is discharged from liability to a particular creditor who, without his consent or knowledge, obtains from the principal debtor an agreement binding the principal debtor to pay the creditor's debt in full<sup>1</sup>. A guarantor for the performance of an agreement which provides that advances are to be made to the principal debtor by means of consignments is discharged from liability if acceptances are substituted for the consignments<sup>2</sup>. A guarantor for payment of an annuity is wholly discharged from liability by the alteration, without his consent, of the time for and terms of its redemption<sup>3</sup>. The forfeiture of shares by a company, by reason of the non-payment of instalments, which the guarantor had guaranteed, releases the guarantor<sup>4</sup>. A guarantor of a particular bank account will be discharged where the bank agrees to open a second account for the principal debtor while the guarantee is still current, thereby making it possible for the principal debtor to make payments into the bank without reducing the guarantor's liability on the guaranteed account<sup>5</sup>.

2 Bellingham v Freer (1837) 1 Moo PCC 333. A guarantor to the vendor of ships for payment of the purchase money by the purchasers is discharged from liability by the improper use by the vendor of one of the ships sold, which the vendor had agreed with the purchasers to freight: Burke v Rogerson (1866) 12 Jur NS 635. Where the principal contract obliges the creditor to give notice to the principal debtor requiring him to pay, and the creditor fails to give such notice, the guarantor will be discharged even though, owing to the death of the principal debtor, it has become impossible to fulfil this requirement: Rickaby v Lewis (1905) 22 TLR 130.

3 Eyre v Bartrop (1818) 3 Madd 221. So where a guarantor guarantees the redemption by the principal debtor of shares in a company to which the principal debtor is about to assign his business, and afterwards the mode of redemption is altered without the guarantor's consent and to his prejudice, the guarantor will be discharged: Polak v Everett (1876) 1 QBD 669, CA. A guarantee given for the due performance of a shipbuilding contract which stipulates for payment by instalments as certain stages of the work are reached is discharged if the building owner makes advance payments greater than those permitted by the contract: General Steam-Navigation Co v Rolt (1858) 6 CBNS 550; Calvert v London Dock Co (1838) 2 Keen 638; Warre v Calvert (1837) 7 Ad & El 143.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/F. OTHER VARIATIONS OF THE PRINCIPAL CONTRACT/1238. Release of property pledged.

1238. Release of property pledged.

Where a guarantor pledges his personal credit by bond or covenant, and by the same contract also pledges his goods, or mortgages or charges his land, as security for the same debt, any alteration of the contract by the mortgagee and the principal debtor behind the guarantor's back, for example by a consolidation deed, with a fresh covenant for payment of the principal sum and other money subsequently advanced at a later date, will discharge the guarantor from all personal liability and also release the property which he has included in the contract<sup>1</sup>.

1 Bolton v Salmon [1891] 2 Ch 48. Where, pursuant to a memorandum of charge, several persons deposited the title deeds of their respective properties with the chargee to secure payment to him of money due or to become due to him from a company and respectively charged their respective properties with the payment of those sums, the subsequent release by the chargee of the title deeds of the property of one of the depositors without the consent of the others, so as to enable that depositor to execute a mortgage of his property having priority to the charge, affected the right of any depositor to have all the properties marshalled so that the burden might fall rateably on the properties charged, and thus increased the risk on the remaining properties, with the result that the other depositors were released from liability: Smith v Wood [1929] 1 Ch 14, CA. It is no longer possible to create an equitable charge over land by the mere deposit of title deeds: see MORTGAGE vol 77 (2010) PARA 105.

GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/F. OTHER VARIATIONS OF THE PRINCIPAL CONTRACT/1239. Effect of fraudulent variations.

1239. Effect of fraudulent variations.

Certain departures from the terms of the principal contract will not discharge the guarantor. Thus, a guarantor cannot claim to be discharged on the ground that his position has been altered by the conduct of the person with whom he has contracted, where that conduct has been caused by the fraudulent act or omission against which the guarantor, by the contract of guarantee, has guaranteed the employer<sup>1</sup> to whom the guarantor owes a duty to see that the principal debtor performs his obligations<sup>2</sup>. Therefore guarantors who have guaranteed that a works contract be well and truly executed will not be discharged by the payment to the contractor of retention money upon a final certificate obtained by the contractor's fraud from the owner of the works, as such fraud is one of the risks covered by and incident to such a guarantee<sup>3</sup>.

Nor will a guarantor be discharged from liability where the principal debtor has obtained by fraud an increase of salary from his employers thereby varying the principal contract<sup>4</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/F. OTHER VARIATIONS OF THE PRINCIPAL CONTRACT/1240. Other matters which do not discharge the guarantor.

1240. Other matters which do not discharge the guarantor.

A guarantor who has guaranteed the due performance of a building contract which entitles the employer to superintend the execution of the works will not be discharged by the mere non-exercise of the right of superintendence<sup>1</sup>, as a mere omission on the part of an employer holding a guarantee will not discharge a guarantor unless, apparently, it is an omission to do some act which the employer has contracted with the guarantor to do, or to preserve some security to the benefit of which the guarantor is entitled<sup>2</sup>.

Where a guarantee for an agent leaves the mode of accounting between him and his principal to the principal's discretion, and the principal, by an agreement with the agent, substitutes for the original method of accounting another of a different but reasonable character, the guarantor will not be discharged<sup>3</sup>; nor will he necessarily be discharged by the employer's acquiescence in an irregular mode of accounting<sup>4</sup>, nor by the employer's non-compliance with its byelaws for the examination of its employees' accounts<sup>5</sup>, nor by negligence in auditing the accounts, nor by allowing the principal debtor to retain in his hands balances far exceeding the amount permitted by the guarantee bond and principal contract, without payment being required or notice given to the guarantor<sup>6</sup>.

A creditor's acceptance of a debtor's wrongful repudiation is not a variation of the contract<sup>7</sup>. Nor is the assignment of a head contract a variation discharging the guarantor of a sub-contract arising under it<sup>8</sup>.

In the case of a guarantee, limited as to amount, for the due and regular payment for goods to be supplied to a trader the guarantor is not discharged by a subsequent agreement between the vendors and the trader providing that the trader shall purchase from them all the goods he requires for his business, or in default pay them a fixed commission on all goods he may purchase elsewhere<sup>9</sup>. An indemnity in respect of all liability to be incurred in giving a bond to the Treasury<sup>10</sup> is applicable to a payment subsequently made by the obligor of the bond to the Treasury for the express purpose of obtaining the cancellation of the bond originally given, where the guarantor's position has not been materially altered by such payment<sup>11</sup>.

Where a person has become guarantor for the performance of two things which are separate and distinct, a subsequent variation, without the guarantor's consent, of the principal contract as to one of them only will not relieve the guarantor from liability in respect of the other thing should it not be performed<sup>12</sup>.

That which merely deprives the principal debtor of a moral inducement to perform his contract will, it seems, not discharge his guarantor from liability<sup>13</sup>.

1241. Variation with guarantor's consent.

The guarantor is not discharged by any variation of the principal contract made with his consent<sup>1</sup>. The guarantee will often expressly authorise the creditor to vary the principal obligation without discharging the guarantor. Such provisions, if appropriately worded, are effective to preserve the guarantor's liability<sup>2</sup>.

The onus of proving that the guarantor has consented is upon the person seeking to enforce the guarantee<sup>3</sup>. The guarantor is not bound to warn the creditor against doing an act which will discharge the guarantee, even though the guarantor knows of the creditor's intention to do the act<sup>4</sup>; nor will the guarantor's mere knowledge of irregularities committed by the creditor in carrying out the principal contract necessarily amount to consent to those irregularities<sup>5</sup>.

G. DEPARTURE BY THE CREDITOR FROM THE PRINCIPAL CONTRACT

1242. The principle.

When considering the effect upon the liability of a guarantor of a departure by the creditor from the terms of the principal contract, the construction of the contract of guarantee is of critical importance, because it is vital to identify the precise nature of the obligation or obligations guaranteed<sup>1</sup>.

Where on the other hand the guarantee is given in respect of obligations arising out of a contemplated course of dealing without incorporating, expressly or impliedly, the terms of any specific contract, the guarantor will not be discharged if what is done remains within the scope of the guarantee<sup>10</sup>. Even a breach by the creditor of the terms of the principal contract will not discharge the guarantor, unless it is a repudiatory breach<sup>11</sup>.

1 City of London v New Hampshire Insurance Co (18 January 1991, unreported), QBD, but summarised at (1991) 3 JIBFL 144; revsd on the particular facts of the case sub nom Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co [1992] 3 All ER 57n, sub nom Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co [1992] 1 WLR 792n, [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365, CA. However, see the comments of Scott J in [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365 at 375-376, cited in note 5.

2 This may be evident from the terms of the contract of guarantee itself, where specific reference is made to the contract giving rise to the obligations guaranteed, or from a consideration of the circumstances surrounding the conclusion of the contract of guarantee, where these show that a specific contract was the subject matter of the guarantee: City of London v New Hampshire Insurance Co (18 January 1991, unreported), QBD, but summarised at (1991) 3 JIBFL 144; revsd on the particular facts of the case sub nom Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co [1992] 3 All ER 57n, sub nom Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co [1992] 1 WLR 792n, [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365, CA. 3 Where the terms of the principal contract are incorporated into the contract of guarantee, any breach of them constitutes a breach of the guarantee itself: Glyn v Hertel (1818) 8 Taunt 208; Garrett v Handley (1825) 4 B & C 664; Holme v Brunskill (1878) 3 QBD 495, CA; Bacon v Chesney (1816) 1 Stark 192; Blest v Brown (1862) 3 Giff 450; on appeal 4 De GF & J 367; Whitcher v Hall (1826) 5 B & C 269; Holme v Brunskill at 505 per Cotton LJ.

4 The terms of the principal contract will not be treated as impliedly embodied in the guarantee if those terms have not been finalised at the date the guarantee is given: Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365 at 370, CA, per Parker LJ and at 371 per Nolan LJ.

5 Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co as reported in [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365, CA. However, in Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co at 375-377, Scott LJ expressed the view that it was unhelpful to speak of the terms of the principal contract being 'embodied' in the guarantee: see further note 11.

6 The guarantee will often expressly authorise the creditor to vary the principal obligation without discharging the guarantor. Such provisions, if appropriately worded, are effective to preserve the guarantor's liability: see PARAS 1216-1217. It is for the creditor to prove that the guarantor has consented: Provincial Bank of Ireland v Fisher [1919] 2 IR 249, HL. Cf generally PARA 1241.

7 In Blest v Brown (1862) 4 De GF & J 367, the guarantor's engagement was construed by the court as one 'to be answerable for flour supplied in conformity with the requisitions of 'a contract between the debtor (a baker) and a third party. The flour supplied by the principal creditor (a corn factor) did not conform to those requisitions, although it did conform to the terms of the contract between the debtor and the creditor. The guarantor was held to be discharged.

8 Blest v Brown (1862) 4 De GF & J 367 at 376 per Lord Westbury LC; Holme v Brunskill (1878) 3 QBD 495 at 505-506, CA, per Cotton LJ; Smith v Wood [1929] 1 Ch 14 at 22-23, CA, per Lord Hanworth MR; Re Darwen and Pearce [1927] 1 Ch 176 at 183-184 per Lawrence J; Egbert v National Crown Bank [1918] AC 903 at 908-909, PC; Vavasour Trust Co Ltd v Ashmore [1976] CA Transcript 157; National Westminster Bank plc v Riley [1986] BCLC 268 at 275-276, CA; Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365, CA. In the following cases the guarantor was held not to be discharged, as there had been no real departure from the terms of the guarantee: Davey v Phelps (1841) 2 Man & G 300; Evans v Earle (1854) 10 Exch 1; Price v Kirkham (1864) 3 H & C 437; Taylor v Bank of New South Wales (1886) 11 App Cas 596, PC; Re Wolmershausen, Wolmershausen v Wolmershausen (1890) 62 LT 541. See also Egbert v National Crown Bank above; Smith v Wood above. In Wardens etc of Mercers Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co above Scott LJ expressed the view that, in cases where the guarantor is a professional compensated guarantor such as a bank or insurance company, binding authority may not prevent the adoption in England of the United States approach, which holds that the guarantor is not discharged absolutely but only pro tanto to the injury to the guarantor's rights.

1243. Particular departures by the creditor.

Where a guarantee stipulates that a certain period of credit be given to the principal debtor, this stipulation must be strictly adhered to<sup>1</sup>. If, however, no definite period of credit is prescribed by the guarantee, then a reasonable credit must be given<sup>2</sup>, and not merely the strict customary credit of the trade<sup>3</sup>. A guarantor for payment of a bill of exchange to be given for a stated sum of money will not be liable, even for that sum, if the bill is given for a different amount<sup>4</sup>, nor in the case of renewed bills unless they substantially correspond with the originals<sup>5</sup>. A guarantor who has agreed to pay whatever another party is made to pay under an insurance policy is not liable for sums paid by that other party under a scheme of arrangement substituted for the policy<sup>6</sup>. A guarantor bond conditioned for payment of a sum to be awarded by the judgment of a court does not extend to a sum awarded under a judgment obtained by consent<sup>7</sup>. Moreover, a guarantor whose liability is defined by one statute may be wholly discharged if his position is subsequently changed by another statute<sup>8</sup>.

However, a guarantor for a customer's account with a bank will not be discharged if the bank commits a non-repudiatory breach of its agreement with the customer, as for example by wrongfully dishonouring a cheque or direct debit<sup>9</sup>. Where a guarantee is given of obligations under a building contract, the creditor's breach by a short delay in giving the principal debtor possession of the site will not discharge the guarantor, where the guarantor had in any event left the creditor and the principal debtor to settle the contractual date for possession<sup>10</sup>.

H. LOSS OF SECURITIES HELD BY CREDITOR

1244. Effect of loss of securities.

On paying the guaranteed debt the guarantor is entitled to have all securities held by the creditor<sup>1</sup> for the debt handed over to him by the creditor in exactly the same state and condition in which they were originally received<sup>2</sup>, whether they were in existence at the date of the contract of guarantee or came into existence subsequently<sup>3</sup>. To protect this right a guarantor is discharged<sup>4</sup> if the creditor without the guarantor's consent<sup>5</sup> fails to make those securities properly available to the guarantor<sup>6</sup>.

This principle will apply whenever the creditor, by reason of what he has done, cannot, on payment by the guarantor, give him the securities in exactly the same condition as they formerly stood in his hands<sup>7</sup>. So the guarantor will be discharged where the creditor loses securities which he had in his possession or power, or permits them to get into the possession of the principal debtor, or fails to perfect them<sup>8</sup>.

The guarantor will be wholly discharged if the release or other dealing with the security constitutes a variation of the principal obligation<sup>9</sup>, or if the maintenance of the security is a condition of the guarantee<sup>10</sup>. In any other case, the guarantor will be released pro tanto to the extent that his rights have been impaired<sup>11</sup>.

1 As to the guarantor's rights to securities held by the creditor in respect of the guaranteed debt see PARA 1141 et seq. These will include securities received by the creditor from co-guarantors: see PARA 1177. Securities held from a co-guarantor may not be wasted: see Margrett v Gregory (1862) 6 LT 543.

5 The guarantee will often expressly authorise the creditor to deal with or release security without discharging the guarantor. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/H. LOSS OF SECURITIES HELD BY CREDITOR/1245. When guarantor is not discharged by loss of securities.

1245. When guarantor is not discharged by loss of securities.

The liability of a guarantor for the principal debtor is not affected by a sale by the principal debtor of the mortgaged property in the manner contemplated by the mortgage deed and with the mortgagee's consent<sup>1</sup>. Moreover, the creditor, on the bankruptcy of the principal debtor, is not required to keep up a policy on the principal debtor's life, but, on the contrary, should sell and realise such a security<sup>2</sup> or surrender the policy and prove for the whole debt<sup>3</sup>. Again, a guarantor is not discharged where, by the creditor's conduct, a right of distress for rent in arrear is destroyed, as a distress is not, strictly speaking, a security held by the creditor in respect of a debt<sup>4</sup>. On the other hand a guarantor is discharged where the creditor abandons an execution against the claimant debtor<sup>5</sup>.

A transaction which causes no loss of securities, or a loss not attributable to the fault of the creditor, will not discharge the guarantor<sup>6</sup>. Thus, if a creditor, having in respect of a debt owing to him a security upon the equitable interests in trust funds of his debtor and of the debtor's guarantor, assigns the debt, together with the securities for the debt, he does not thereby relieve the guarantor from liability, and he need not even give the guarantor notice of the assignment in order to render it binding and effectual<sup>7</sup>. A temporary loan of title deeds for a legitimate purpose by the creditor to the principal debtor on the principal debtor undertaking to return them, which he subsequently does, will not, it seems, discharge the guarantor<sup>8</sup>.

Where a security for the guaranteed debt proves worthless, whether it was originally so or became so afterwards, the guarantor is not discharged unless the loss or deficiency was occasioned by the creditor's act<sup>9</sup>. The creditor is not liable to the principal debtor or to the guarantor for a decline in value of a security, unless the creditor was personally responsible for the decline<sup>10</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/I. RELEASE OF CO-GUARANTOR/1246. Release of co-guarantor.

I. RELEASE OF CO-GUARANTOR

1246. Release of co-guarantor.

In accordance with the general rule of law<sup>1</sup>, a release of one of two joint or joint and several guarantors, without the consent of the other<sup>2</sup> and without reserving remedies against him<sup>3</sup>, will bar the creditor's right of action against the other on the guarantee<sup>4</sup>. Moreover, where one co-guarantor is released the security given by the other will also, apparently, be discharged<sup>5</sup>.

In each case, however, it has to be determined whether what has occurred amounts to a release, and, where no formal release is given and what is relied on is an agreement not made by deed, the surrounding circumstances and the intention of the parties must be regarded<sup>6</sup>.

Where co-guarantors are only severally bound, the release of one<sup>7</sup> will wholly or partially discharge the others if it destroys or injuriously affects the right of contribution or marshalling<sup>8</sup>. If, however, it is no part of the contract that others shall join in it as co-guarantors, that is to say if each guarantor contracts only severally, the release of one will not discharge the others if it does not affect the right of contribution<sup>9</sup>.

1 See Deanplan Ltd v Mahmoud [1993] Ch 151, [1992] 3 All ER 945; and CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 1089.

2 Modern forms of guarantee often contain provisions permitting the creditor to release one or more co-guarantors without affecting the liability of the others. Such provisions, if appropriately worded, are effective: see PARAS 1216-1217.

3 For an example of an effective reservation of rights against the other guarantor see Commercial Bank of Australia v Wilson & Co's Estate (Official Assignee) [1893] AC 181, PC. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(7) DISCHARGE OF THE GUARANTEE/(vii) Discharge by Conduct of Creditor/I. RELEASE OF CO-GUARANTOR/1247. Where co-guarantors are not discharged.

1247. Where co-guarantors are not discharged.

A guarantor will not be discharged where there is no actual release of his co-guarantor by the creditor, but a mere compounding with or giving of time to the co-guarantor<sup>1</sup>, or a mere covenant not to sue<sup>2</sup>, or where the creditor acts with the guarantor's consent<sup>3</sup>; and in the case of a release of one co-guarantor, with a reservation of remedies against the other, that other is not discharged<sup>4</sup>, such a release operating as a covenant not to sue<sup>5</sup>. A release of a guarantor will, however, release his co-guarantors even though it reserves remedies against guarantors for the person released, since the relationship between co-guarantors is not that of principal and guarantor<sup>6</sup>.

Where guarantors are jointly liable under a guarantee, an unsatisfied judgment in a claim on a cheque given by one of them in respect of the common liability is no bar to a claim against the other on the guarantee<sup>7</sup>.

A release by a creditor of an ostensible partner in a firm does not discharge the person whose partner he has held himself out to be, as there is no right of contribution between them<sup>8</sup>.

For there to be a release of a joint obligor that discharges another joint obligor, whether the liability be joint or joint and several, the release must be immediate, or have become operative, and must be without reservation of rights against the other joint obligor<sup>9</sup>.

This method used to be frequently adopted where creditors executed a deed of composition (see Re Slade, ex p Carstairs (1820) Buck 560) before the Bankruptcy Act 1883 first preserved the guarantor's liability to a creditor executing a composition deed. See also Greene King plc v Stanley [2001] EWCA Civ 1966, [2002] All ER (D) 56 (Jan) (no relevant distinction between the position of a surety and that of a co-debtor and it has long been accepted that on the release of a co-debtor a creditor may reserve his rights against other co-debtors; accordingly, it is open to a creditor to release the debtor under an individual voluntary arrangement ('IVA') whilst reserving its rights against the debtor's sureties. Further, it is open to the court in construing an IVA to look at all the circumstances, including the dealings between the parties which have led to the IVA). See further PARA 1100. As to compositions see BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARA 863.

In that case, an individual voluntary arrangement entered into by one co-guarantor was interpreted as suspending the creditors' rights, not releasing the first co-guarantor from his obligations, and did not release the second co-guarantor from his obligations to the claimant under the guarantee.

J. UNCONSCIONABLE DELAY BY CREDITOR

1248. Creditor's laches discharging guarantor.

The doctrine of unconscionable delay ('laches'), as generally applied, provides an equitable defence which bars claims where there has been undue delay in prosecuting them<sup>1</sup>. The chief element in laches, in this sense, is acquiescence<sup>2</sup>; and there is little uniformity in the way that the words 'laches' and 'acquiescence' are used<sup>3</sup>. However, in the law of guarantee, the word 'laches' is sometimes used in a specialised sense, to mean conduct by the creditor (usually the omission to do something) which has the effect of discharging the guarantor<sup>4</sup>.

In general, a creditor is entitled to consult his own interests, and is not obliged to take positive steps to protect or to improve the guarantor's position<sup>5</sup>. However, the terms of the contract of guarantee may impose obligations on the creditor, which if unperformed will prevent him from claiming against the guarantor<sup>6</sup>; and equity also requires him to take certain steps for the protection of the guarantor as a condition of permitting him to enforce the guarantee<sup>7</sup>. An omission by the creditor to do something which he is bound in equity to do for the protection of the guarantor will amount to laches, discharging the guarantor<sup>8</sup>. However, mere passive acquiescence in acts which, although contrary to the conditions of the guarantee<sup>9</sup>, do not amount to connivance or negligence, equivalent to shutting the eyes to fraud or conduct approximating to it, will not do so<sup>10</sup>.

A guarantor for the performance of a building contract is discharged from liability by the building owner's omission to insure the work undertaken against loss by fire in accordance with a stipulation in the contract notified to the guarantor before he became bound as such<sup>1</sup>. A broker buying goods for his principal and undertaking for a stated commission to indemnify him from any loss on resale is not responsible if the principal neglects a fair opportunity of selling goods at a profit and is afterwards obliged to sell at a loss<sup>2</sup>. A person who has bound himself to indorse any bills that may be given in part payment of a debt to be contracted by a third person is discharged unless a demand is made upon him to fulfil his promise within a reasonable and convenient time<sup>3</sup>; while a guarantor for payment of a bill by the drawer or acceptor is not liable after the creditor fails to take necessary steps to obtain payment of the bill which might reasonably have been taken before the insolvency of the drawer and acceptor<sup>4</sup>. Such a guarantor will not, however, be discharged from liability by the creditor's failure to render the bill complete by inserting the drawer's name<sup>5</sup>. Nevertheless there may be circumstances showing a contract which binds the creditor, as between him and the guarantor, to make the principal debtor's liability complete, so that the guarantor will be entitled to relief should the creditor not do so<sup>6</sup>.

A guarantor for the good behaviour of another in an office or employment has a right to expect that persons associated with that other person will in all things affecting the guarantor's liability conduct themselves according to law and fulfil their duties<sup>1</sup>. The guarantor will not, however, be discharged, even where there are such persons who have been guilty of laches, unless it can also be proved that the person to whom the guarantor is bound has either prevented the principal debtor from doing the things for the due performance of which the guarantor is answerable or has connived at their omission or enabled the principal debtor to do what he ought not to have done, and that but for such conduct the omission or commission guaranteed against would not have occurred<sup>2</sup>.

The guarantor is discharged if the employer does not deal with the employee in the manner required by the nature of his office<sup>3</sup>. He may further require the employer to dismiss the employee where the employee has been guilty of misconduct, and should the employer possess the power to dismiss and fail to exercise it, the guarantor will be discharged<sup>4</sup>.

A creditor is not guilty of laches if, knowing that security held by him for the guaranteed debt is declining in value, he omits to exercise his power of sale so that the security eventually becomes worthless<sup>1</sup>.

A creditor's refusal to take legal proceedings which must prove abortive<sup>2</sup>, or failure by the principal debtor, with the creditor's connivance, to do something under the principal contract diminishing the guarantor's risk, is not laches<sup>3</sup>. Nor is it laches where, owing to the creditor's omission to reply to the guarantor's question, the guarantor wrongly interprets his silence to mean that a supply of goods to the principal debtor, stipulated for by the guarantee, has not been made, and in consequence gives up an indemnity he has received<sup>4</sup>.

Where a guarantor guarantees the honesty of an employee, he is not entitled to be discharged from his obligation because the employer fails to use all the means in his power to guard against the consequences of dishonesty<sup>5</sup>. Nor, it seems, is an employer debarred from recovering against the guarantor under a fidelity guarantee merely because he has delayed in giving notice to the guarantor of the employee's misconduct in respect of which the employer is seeking to recover, if the guarantor had become acquainted with the misconduct from another quarter<sup>6</sup>. A creditor who continues to trust the principal debtor after the principal debtor has been guilty of theft to the knowledge of the guarantor may enforce the guarantor's liability, in respect of a subsequent default of the principal debtor also amounting to theft, even though the guarantor has desired him not to trust the debtor any more with cash<sup>7</sup>, but he cannot do so if the guarantor has called upon him to dismiss the principal debtor<sup>8</sup>.

Where it is provided by deed that the principal debtor's effects are to be sold before recourse is made to the guarantor, the guarantor is not discharged by the carelessness of the trustee under the deed in omitting to sell them and thereby enabling the goods to be seized and sold in bankruptcy<sup>1</sup>. On the other hand, if the creditor seizes and sells the principal debtor's goods under a bill of sale, the guarantor may plead, as a defence to a claim brought against him on his guarantee, that but for the mismanagement of the creditor's agents those goods would have realised sufficient to satisfy the guaranteed debt<sup>2</sup>.

Where the creditor has been guilty of laches, the guarantor is not thereby necessarily wholly discharged from liability<sup>1</sup>, but may sometimes be only pro tanto relieved from it<sup>2</sup>. Whether or not a guarantor is wholly discharged depends, it seems, upon a distinction made in equity between those rights of the guarantor which he acquired at the time he entered into the guarantee, and those rights subsequently acquired by him. That which prejudicially affects rights acquired upon entry into the guarantee amounts to a breach of contract which wholly discharges the guarantor, but that which only affects rights acquired subsequent to the guarantee will usually do no more than discharge the guarantor to the extent to which he is actually injured<sup>3</sup>.

(i) In general

A. NATURE AND CREATION OF RIGHTS OF INDEMNITY

1255. Nature of contract of indemnity.

A contract of indemnity is a contract by one party to keep the other harmless against loss<sup>1</sup>.

In the widest sense of the term, therefore, it will include most contracts of insurance<sup>2</sup> and also a contract of guarantee<sup>3</sup>. All three types of contract may perform similar commercial functions, in providing compensation to the creditor for the failure of a third party to perform his obligations. However, the description 'contract of indemnity' is normally limited to describing a contract to save the promisee from loss caused by the claims of third parties, when it will not include a contract of marine insurance against loss or damage to the subject matter of the insurance<sup>4</sup>, and may even be differentiated from those contracts of insurance which have for their object the protection of the assured against liability to third parties<sup>5</sup>. It is normally used in law to denote a contract by which the promisor undertakes an original and independent obligation to indemnify, as distinct from a collateral contract in the nature of a guarantee by which the promisor undertakes to answer for the default of another person who is to be primarily liable to the promisee<sup>6</sup>. Performance bonds, which are considered separately below<sup>7</sup>, fall within this definition.

The importance of the distinction appears to be that the contract of indemnity, as such, is not a contract of the utmost good faith (uberrimae fidei) (Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society Ltd v Munich Reinsurance Co), and that in the case of an insurance there is a legal and not merely an equitable right on the part of the assured to claim under the policy as soon as the event insured against (ie the liability to meet the claims of a third person) has arisen, and it is immaterial that he has not discharged the liability (see Firma C-Trade SA v Newcastle Protection and Indemnity Association [1991] 2 AC 1, [1990] 2 All ER 705, HL; Re Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society Ltd, Liverpool Mortgage Insurance Co's Case above; Re Eddystone Marine Insurance Co [1892] 2 Ch 423). In Yeoman Credit Ltd v Latter above at 299 and at 835, Harman LJ observed that the question whether a contract was one of guarantee or indemnity was 'a most barren controversy. It dates back . . . to the Statute of Frauds, 1677, and has raised many hair-splitting distinctions of exactly that kind which brings the law into hatred, ridicule and contempt by the public . . . and the decided cases on the subject are hardly to be reconciled'.

1256. Necessity for writing.

A promise in the nature of an indemnity is not within the Statute of Frauds (1677), and thus does not need to be evidenced by a written memorandum signed by the party to be charged or his duly authorised agent<sup>1</sup>, even though it may involve the obligation of compensating a loss caused by the failure of another to pay a debt<sup>2</sup>. Nor does the Statute of Frauds apply to a promise by one of several persons against whom a claim lies to discharge the claim<sup>3</sup>. The statute does not apply where the promise to answer for another's debt or default is only an incident of a contract dealing with other matters<sup>4</sup>, as in the case of an agreement by an agent to sell on a del credere commission<sup>5</sup>, or an agreement by an agent or employee to be answerable in respect of a certain proportion of bad debts incurred by him<sup>6</sup>. Where, however, the only object of the contract is to secure forbearance in favour of the person primarily liable, a promise to pay his debt is within the Statute of Frauds, whatever may be the promisor's ultimate motives<sup>7</sup>.

1257. Creation of rights of indemnity.

Rights of indemnity may arise from contract, express or implied, from an obligation resulting from the relation of the parties<sup>1</sup>, or by statute<sup>2</sup>. Whether in any particular case any right of indemnity arises, and the extent of any such indemnity, will depend upon the terms of the contract<sup>3</sup> or statute in question<sup>4</sup>, or the nature of the relationship<sup>5</sup>.

As to the guarantor's implied right to an indemnity from the principal debtor see PARA 1148 et seq. In Wynne v Tempest [1897] 1 Ch 110 at 113, where trust money had been paid by a deceased trustee into the hands of a firm in which he was a partner, his co-trustee's right to recover the money from the firm was held not to be a right of indemnity against his liability in proceedings for breach of trust, since the right existed independently of the proceedings.

2 Among the many statutes which create an express right of indemnity (some of which are merely declaratory) are the Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856 s 5 (see PARA 1141 note 2); the Partnership Act 1890 s 24(2) (see PARTNERSHIP vol 79 (2008) PARA 138); the Trustee Act 1925 s 62 (see TRUSTS vol 48 (2007 Reissue) PARA 1131); the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s 75(2) (see CONSUMER CREDIT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 250); the Companies Act 2006 s 767(3) (formerly the Companies Act 1985 s 117(8)) (see COMPANIES vol 14 (2009) PARA 76); the Land Registration Act 2002 s 8(b), s 103, Sch 8 (see LAND REGISTRATION vol 26 (2004 Reissue) PARAS 829, 983 et seq). By statute there is a right of contribution which may amount to an indemnity between persons liable in respect of the same damage: see the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978; and TORT vol 45(2) (Reissue) PARA 348 et seq.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(8) CONTRACTS OF INDEMNITY/(i) In general/A. NATURE AND CREATION OF RIGHTS OF INDEMNITY/1258. Implied contract or obligation of law.

1258. Implied contract or obligation of law.

A right to indemnity based on an implied contract or an obligation imposed by law may arise in various ways.

Such a right may arise where money is paid at the request of another<sup>1</sup>. Similarly, where one person has been compelled by law to pay, or, being compellable by law, has paid money to another which a third party was ultimately liable to pay so that the third party obtains the benefit of the payment by the discharge of his liability, the person who made the payment may recover the amount of the payment from the third party<sup>2</sup>.

When an act is done by one person at the request of another, and the act is not in itself manifestly tortious to the knowledge of the person doing it, and it turns out to be injurious to the rights of a third party, the person doing it is entitled to an indemnity from the person who requested that it should be done<sup>3</sup>. This principle is not confined to cases of principal and agent<sup>4</sup>. A special situation exists where the person receiving the request or demand has a duty to act upon it, where the right of indemnity arises by operation of law<sup>5</sup>. It may also apply even though the person seeking the indemnity is acting in the exercise of his free discretion<sup>6</sup>. But it does not apply where the injury to the third party arose not as the natural and necessary consequence of the doing of an act but merely from the manner in which the act was done<sup>7</sup>, or where the liability to the third party arose from the person seeking the indemnity's own default or breach of duty<sup>8</sup>.

This is a general principle, not a conclusion of law which is always to be drawn. Whether there is an obligation to indemnify must greatly depend upon the circumstances of each individual case: Naviera Mogor SA v Société Metallurgique de Normandie, The Nogar Marin above at 417 per curiam. This principle may have to be reviewed in the light of the statutory provisions for contribution between persons liable in respect of the same damage (see the Civil Liability (Contribution) Act 1978; and TORT vol 45(2) (Reissue) PARA 348 et seq); Yeung v Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corpn above at 799-800, 608; see also PARA 1261 text and note 5.

5 Naviera Mogor SA v Société Metallurgique de Normandie, The Nogar Marin [1988] 1 Lloyd's Rep 412 at 417, CA. The indemnity does not arise where there is a 'default' on the part of that person. However, the 'default' which disqualifies the claimant who acts ministerially is the same as the 'manifestly tortious' act which is an exception to the general principle. It always involves an element of turpitude and does not extend to the case where the actor has carelessly failed to make inquiries which would have revealed the true nature of the act, or where he has culpably but not recklessly drawn the wrong inference from such inquiries as he has made: Naviera Mogor SA v Société Metallurgique de Normandie, The Nogar Marin at 417; and see the text and note 8. An indorser of a bill of exchange is entitled to an indemnity from the acceptor<sup>1</sup>. An accommodation party<sup>2</sup> to a bill of exchange is entitled to an indemnity from the party accommodated<sup>3</sup>. A broker has a right to be indemnified by his client<sup>4</sup>. A contract of marine insurance is not a perfect contract of indemnity, but it and other contracts of insurance, except life assurance, are ordinarily termed contracts of indemnity<sup>5</sup>.

The assignor of a lease is not a guarantor for the assignee<sup>6</sup>, but a lessee is entitled to indemnity from his assignee for the assignee's breach of covenant<sup>7</sup>. A covenant by the assignee of a lease to perform and observe the covenants of the lease, or a covenant by a purchaser of freehold land to observe and perform covenants contained in a previous conveyance of the land, is construed as a covenant of indemnity only, and the covenantee is not entitled to insist on its observance except so far as is necessary for his indemnity<sup>8</sup>. But a covenant by an underlessor to observe the covenants in the head lease and indemnify the underlessee against them is not merely a covenant of indemnity against forfeiture proceedings by the head lessor, but one requiring the underlessor to comply with the obligations imposed by the head lease<sup>9</sup>.

A mortgagee is entitled to be paid his reasonable costs and expenses as mortgagee<sup>10</sup>. Partners are entitled to be indemnified out of the partnership assets against liabilities properly incurred in the partnership business<sup>11</sup>. Where a charterparty exempts shipowners from liability for negligence and the charterers by failing to introduce such an exemption into the bills of lading involve the shipowners in liability to third parties, the charterers must indemnify the shipowners<sup>12</sup>. An enforcement officer executing a distress is entitled to indemnity from the landlord<sup>13</sup>, and a judgment creditor who requires a sheriff or other enforcement officer to execute against particular goods is liable to indemnify him against a resulting claim by a third party<sup>14</sup>.

However, in relation to new tenancies to which the 1995 Act applies a tenant is now released from the tenant covenants on assignment of the lease (see s 5) and the landlord may be released from the landlord covenants on assignment of the reversion (see s 6). ## 1260. Indemnities as incidents of legal relationships.

A right of indemnity is an incident of certain legal relationships, for example those of agency or employer and employee, where an agent or employee is liable to be indemnified by his principal or employer against liabilities incurred in the reasonable performance of his agency or employment<sup>1</sup>. Rights of indemnity may also arise under principles of equity. In case of breach of trust a trustee may be indemnified out of the interest of a beneficiary who has instigated the breach<sup>2</sup> or be entitled to contribution or indemnity from a co-trustee<sup>3</sup>. A personal representative is entitled to be indemnified out of the estate for his proper expenses<sup>4</sup>. A receiver is ordinarily entitled to be indemnified out of the assets against liabilities properly incurred by him<sup>5</sup>. A director of a company regulated by the Companies Act 1985 is entitled to be indemnified by the company for all debts, expenses and liabilities incurred in the ordinary course of business, and for money borrowed and applied for those purposes<sup>6</sup>.

The trustees or committee of a club are not in general entitled to be indemnified by the members against liabilities incurred on behalf of the club<sup>7</sup>. Rights of indemnity arising in relation to branches of law other than guarantee are discussed elsewhere in this work in the appropriate context<sup>8</sup>.

1261. Implied right excluded by express contract.

In the absence of an indication of a contrary intention, the right to an implied indemnity is excluded by an express contract relating to the same subject matter<sup>1</sup>; for, where there is an express contract, the parties must be guided by it, and one party cannot relinquish it or abide by it as it may suit his convenience to do<sup>2</sup>. Thus the guarantor's implied right to be indemnified by the principal debtor is excluded by an express contract of indemnification between them<sup>3</sup>.

The statutory right to contribution<sup>4</sup> does not affect any express or implied contractual or other right to an indemnity which would be enforceable apart from that statutory right<sup>5</sup>.

Akin to implied indemnities are those cases where necessities are supplied to persons who, by reason of disability, cannot themselves contract, in circumstances which would justify the court in inferring an obligation to repay the money spent upon them. In cases of this kind the law implies an obligation on the part of such persons to pay for the necessities supplied out of their own property<sup>1</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(8) CONTRACTS OF INDEMNITY/(i) In general/A. NATURE AND CREATION OF RIGHTS OF INDEMNITY/1263. Assignment of right of indemnity.

1263. Assignment of right of indemnity.

Except in the case of certain contracts of insurance<sup>1</sup>, the right to enforce an indemnity is property which, on the bankruptcy of the person indemnified, passes to the trustee in bankruptcy<sup>2</sup>, and the trustee may recover the full amount for which the promisor is liable under the contract of indemnity, and not only the amount of dividend which the estate may pay to the creditor in respect of his claim<sup>3</sup>. The amount so recovered forms part of the assets divisible among the general body of creditors, and the creditor in respect of whose debt the indemnity was given may not in general claim payment of that amount to himself<sup>4</sup>.

The right to indemnification is also assignable, at any rate to the creditor, either by the indemnified party himself or by his trustee in bankruptcy, and the assignee may enforce it in his own name in an action against the indemnifier<sup>5</sup>. In certain cases, where the right to indemnification arises under a contract of insurance, the rights of the assured against the insurer, on the bankruptcy of the assured, are by statute transferred to the person to whom he has incurred the liability against which the contract insures him<sup>6</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(8) CONTRACTS OF INDEMNITY/(i) In general/B. EXTENT OF INDEMNITY/1264. Extent of liability under indemnity.

B. EXTENT OF INDEMNITY

1264. Extent of liability under indemnity.

The extent of a person's liability under an indemnity depends on the nature and terms of the contract, and each case must be governed, in general, by its own facts and circumstances<sup>1</sup>. A clause will not indemnify a person against damage caused by his negligence, where it also indemnifies against damage otherwise arising, unless it is clearly expressed to have such an effect<sup>2</sup>.

The holder of an indemnity, when acting within the scope of his authority, is generally entitled to recover the amount payable by him by virtue of any judgment recovered against or compromise reasonably made by him in any legal proceedings in respect of any matter comprised by the indemnity, together with all costs properly incurred in defending such legal proceedings, including his own costs<sup>3</sup>.

It is not necessary in order to bring the claim against the indemnifier that notice of the proceedings should have been given to the indemnifier, but if it is not given it will be open to him to impugn the judgment or the compromise<sup>4</sup>. It is therefore prudent to join him as a party to the proceedings<sup>5</sup>. If, having been put on notice, he then refuses so to act, he will, in general, be estopped from denying the validity of the judgment or the reasonableness of the compromise<sup>6</sup>, and it will be difficult for him to show that any costs incurred in defending the proceedings were improperly incurred<sup>7</sup>. Nevertheless, if they were improperly incurred, he will not be liable for them<sup>8</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(8) CONTRACTS OF INDEMNITY/(i) In general/B. EXTENT OF INDEMNITY/1265. When indemnity covers costs of proceedings.

1265. When indemnity covers costs of proceedings.

In all cases where there is a contract of indemnity the costs of legal proceedings properly incurred by the person indemnified are recoverable under the indemnity<sup>1</sup>, and in such cases it seems that costs on an indemnity basis<sup>2</sup> are to be awarded<sup>3</sup>. The person indemnified is not, however, entitled to defend a claim which must obviously be decided against him<sup>4</sup>.

Where one person promises to indemnify another from costs if he will stay proceedings against a third person and sue some one designated, the mere stay of proceedings will entitle the promisee to enforce the indemnity<sup>5</sup>.

The public policy against maintenance<sup>6</sup> may be a reason for ordering a person who has agreed to indemnify a party to litigation against the costs of the claim to pay the costs of the other party if that other party is successful<sup>7</sup>. However, although the court undoubtedly has power to order someone who is not a party to the litigation to pay the costs of it<sup>8</sup>, that power will only be exercised in exceptional circumstances<sup>9</sup>.

1 Duffield v Scott (1789) 3 Term Rep 374; Jones v Williams (1841) 7 M & W 493; The Millwall [1905] P 155, CA; and see Lister v Romford Ice and Cold Storage Co Ltd [1957] AC 555, [1957] 1 All ER 125, HL; Allen v London Guarantee and Accident Co Ltd (1912) 28 TLR 254, where an insurance company defended actions in the name of the assured without his consent, and was held, therefore, to have incurred a common law liability for the costs of the action; and Bourne v Colodense Ltd [1985] ICR 291, CA (when the plaintiff agreed to accept legal assistance offered by his union there was an understanding between the parties amounting in law to a contract that the union would discharge any liability for costs which the plaintiff might incur). In the absence of special circumstances, the costs of an appeal are not recoverable: see Maxwell v British Thomson Houston Co Ltd [1904] 2 KB 342; Shepherd v Bray [1906] 2 Ch 235 at 254; and see also Great Western Rly Co v Fisher [1905] 1 Ch 316 (costs of action to enforce arbitration award). An agreement to be bound by the result of an arbitration does not carry with it an implied agreement to pay the costs which may be incurred in it: Thomas Jackson & Co Ltd v Henderson, Craig & Co Ltd (1916) 115 LT 36, CA. See also Potter v LCC (1905) 70 JP 35, where the agreement was by the defendants to repay to the plaintiff any sum paid by way of compensation for damage caused to third parties by certain operations of the plaintiff and it was held that this was not a contract of indemnity under which the plaintiff could recover the costs of the proceedings in which the compensation was settled.

3 Smith v Compton (1832) 3 B & Ad 407; Howard v Lovegrove (1870) LR 6 Exch 43, where it was held that the whole costs paid by the client to the solicitor were reasonable; Born v Turner [1900] 2 Ch 211; Barnett v Eccles Corp [1900] 2 QB 423 at 428, CA, per Vaughan Williams LJ. In Maxwell v British Thomson Houston Co Ltd [1904] 2 KB 342 at 344 per Kennedy J, it was held that a person who was indemnifying another against the costs of an action could not, unless there were some special circumstances, be called upon to pay them on the former solicitor and own client basis. It would appear, however, that there is a distinction between the case of a person who is entitled by contract to an indemnity and the case of a person who is simply recovering damages. A person so entitled to an indemnity may recover costs on what is now the indemnity basis, but a person simply recovering damages may not: Great Western Rly Co v Fisher [1905] 1 Ch 316 at 324; Born v Turner above; Barnett v Eccles Corp above; Wiffen v Bailey and Romford UDC [1915] 1 KB 600 at 607, CA, per Buckley LJ; see also Hornby v Cardwell (1881) 8 QBD 329 at 333, CA; Penley v Watts (1841) 7 M & W 601 at 609; Tindall v Bell (1843) 11 M & W 228. #### 1266. Enforcement of indemnity at law and in equity.

Before the passing of the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts 1873 and 1875 there was a difference between the remedies available to enforce an ordinary contract of indemnity at law on the one hand and in equity on the other<sup>1</sup>. At law the indemnified party had<sup>2</sup> to discharge the liability himself first and then sue the indemnifier for damages for breach of contract<sup>3</sup>. In equity, an ordinary contract of indemnity could be directed to be specifically performed by ordering that the indemnifier should pay the amount concerned directly to the third party to whom the liability was owed or in some cases to the party to be indemnified<sup>4</sup>. Since the passing of the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts 1873 and 1875, the equitable remedy has prevailed over the remedy at law<sup>5</sup>.

2 Unless, that is, the contract included a special provision by virtue of which the right could be enforced at law before payment had been made: see Toussaint v Martinant (1787) 2 Term Rep 100; Martin v Court (1788) 2 Term Rep 640; Hodgson v Bell (1797) 7 Term Rep 97; Warwick v Richardson (1842) 10 M & W 284; Spark v Heslop (1859) 1 E & E 563; English and Scottish Trust Co v Flatau (1887) 36 WR 238. In particular this promise would arise when, coupled with the promise of indemnity, there was a promise by the promisor himself to discharge the claim against which the indemnity was given: see Penny v Foy (1828) 8 B & C 11; Carr v Roberts (1833) 5 B & Ad 78; Smith v Howell (1851) 6 Exch 730. An express promise to indemnify was unnecessary in such a case, for the breach of such a contract could raise an obligation to indemnify (see Hornby v Cardwell (1881) 8 QBD 329 at 333, CA, per Brett LJ), and gave the promisee an immediate cause of action (Loosemoor v Radford (1842) 9 M & W 657; Ashdown v Ingamells (1880) 5 ExD 280, CA; and see Lethbridge v Mytton (1831) 2 B & Ad 772).

The amount so paid constituted a debt due to him from the promisor. Under the old system of pleading it could be recovered under the common money counts as money paid for the defendant's use, and could be set off: see Rodgers v Maw (1846) 15 M & W 444; Hutchinson v Sydney (1854) 10 Exch 438; Crampton v Walker (1860) 3 E & E 321. Payment for this purpose included the case where the indemnified's goods had been taken in execution and the proceeds of sale paid to the creditor: Rodgers v Maw above. If a person's goods are lawfully distrained upon or seized for another's debt, he may recover the amount which he pays to redeem them or the value of the goods, if they are sold, from the debtor as under an implied contract of indemnity: Exall v Partridge (1799) 8 Term Rep 308; Edmunds v Wallingford (1885) 14 QBD 811, CA.

1267. The remedies available.

Unless the terms of the contract expressly prohibit it, a person entitled to an indemnity may obtain relief as soon as his liability to the third person has arisen and before he has made payment<sup>1</sup>. He may therefore, where appropriate, obtain an order compelling the person giving the indemnity to set aside a fund out of which liability may be met<sup>2</sup> or to pay the amount due directly to the third person<sup>3</sup> or even, where the giver of the indemnity is under no liability to the third person<sup>4</sup>, to himself<sup>5</sup>. But the equitable right to enforce an indemnity does not constitute a debt<sup>6</sup>. An indemnified person is not precluded from obtaining relief by the fact that his liability to the third person cannot effectively be enforced against him<sup>7</sup>.

The date when time begins to run against a person entitled to an indemnity depends upon the nature and extent of the indemnity, and the nature of the relief claimed<sup>8</sup>.

1268. Granting of further relief.

The court may grant relief even before any liability has actually arisen if there is real ground for fearing that the rights of the party indemnified are being put in jeopardy<sup>1</sup>, and if his claim to be indemnified is denied he can obtain a declaration that he has a right to be relieved from liability<sup>2</sup>. Apart, however, from these exceptional cases, it would seem that the court will not grant relief before any liability has arisen<sup>3</sup>, although, apparently, where it has arisen the court will declare the right to indemnity generally, with liberty to apply from time to time to work it out<sup>4</sup>.

Whether or not the person entitled to the indemnity and the person liable to indemnify him are already parties to the same claim, a claim by a defendant for an indemnity may be made under Part 20 of the Civil Procedure Rules ('CPR')<sup>5</sup>.

When a guarantor availed himself of the former procedure for issuing a third party notice under RSC Ord 16 r 1 (revoked) in order to enforce an express contract by the principal debtor to indemnify him, it was held that he could sign judgment against the principal debtor before anything had been paid under the guarantee: English and Scottish Trust Co v Flatau (1887) 36 WR 238. ## (B) WHEN INDEMNITY IS UNENFORCEABLE FOR ILLEGALITY

1269. Indemnities unenforceable for illegality.

An express indemnity may be unenforceable for illegality<sup>1</sup>. In cases where an express indemnity would be illegal, no right to an indemnity can arise by implication<sup>2</sup>. There is no right of indemnity where the party to the transaction or the doer of the act in respect of which indemnity is claimed knows it at the time to constitute a criminal offence<sup>3</sup> or would have known had he not been grossly negligent<sup>4</sup>. Nor is there such a right where the party to the transaction or the doer of the act, although he has full knowledge of the circumstances making the transaction an offence, does not appreciate that those circumstances constitute an offence<sup>5</sup>.

Punishment inflicted by a criminal court is personal to the offender and the civil courts will not entertain a claim by him to recover an indemnity against it, nor in general does public policy permit an indemnity to be enforced in respect of expenses which the offender has incurred by reason of being compelled to make civil reparation for his crime<sup>6</sup>.

A contract to indemnify a surety against liability under a recognisance on the admission of an accused person to bail in criminal proceedings is illegal<sup>7</sup>. So money deposited with such a surety for his protection against the accused person's default cannot be recovered, unless the person who deposited it did not take part in the illegality<sup>8</sup>; and it is immaterial that the defendant has not committed any default and the surety has not been called upon to pay anything<sup>9</sup>.

A guarantor for payment of an instalment under a deed of composition under which the principal debtor's property is vested in a trustee on behalf of one of the creditors, who has a power to seize it if default is made, is not entitled to the benefit of a counter-indemnity received by him from the principal debtor which the creditors have neither sanctioned nor authorised<sup>10</sup>, although such a guarantor is entitled to retain goods deposited with him by the principal debtor, unknown to the principal debtor's creditors, under an agreement to indemnify the guarantor in consideration of the guarantor's guaranteeing instalments under a deed of composition, if the terms of the composition leave the goods at the debtor's own disposal<sup>11</sup>.

1270. Indemnities not unenforceable for illegality.

An employer may be indemnified by a contractor for whose acts he is legally responsible against damage resulting from the execution of the work<sup>1</sup>. A motor insurance policy covering third party liability is enforceable even though the claim arises from manslaughter<sup>2</sup>.

An agreement for indemnifying any person against civil liability for libel in respect of the publication of any matter is not unlawful unless at the time of publication that person knows that the matter is defamatory and does not reasonably believe there is a good defence to any claim brought upon it<sup>3</sup>.

Apart from questions of illegality, indemnities against claims by third persons of the most varied kinds have always been allowed<sup>4</sup>, and they are not invalid on the grounds of maintenance<sup>5</sup>, even though involving and contemplating the institution or defence of legal proceedings, when given in the legitimate defence of a business, commercial or other common interest<sup>6</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(8) CONTRACTS OF INDEMNITY/(ii) Performance Bonds/1271. Performance bonds or performance guarantees; in general.

(ii) Performance Bonds

1271. Performance bonds or performance guarantees; in general.

Some contracts for the international sale of goods include provision for one party, often the seller, to procure a performance bond or an international bank guarantee from a bank or an insurance or other company in favour of the other contracting party, normally the buyer, the seller being known as the account party and the buyer the beneficiary of the bond or guarantee<sup>1</sup>. A performance bond or performance guarantee<sup>2</sup> commonly provides for payments to be made on the mere demand of the beneficiary, typically the buyer under the contract of sale, and consequently acts as an incentive to the seller to perform his obligations under that contract<sup>3</sup>. The contractual obligations arising under such guarantees or bonds are separate from, and not dependent on, those existing under the sale contract between the seller and the buyer<sup>4</sup>. A performance bond is thus not a guarantee in the strict sense at all. The obligation to pay is independent of the underlying contract between the account party and the beneficiary, or of the merits of any dispute under that contract, and the various equitable defences which are available to a surety are not available to the issuer of a performance bond<sup>5</sup>.

By issuing a performance bond or performance guarantee a bank assumes obligations to a buyer or other beneficiary analogous to those assumed by a confirming bank to the seller under a documentary credit<sup>6</sup>. A bank which gives a performance guarantee must honour that guarantee according to its terms. The bank is not concerned in the least with the relations between the supplier and the customer; nor with the question whether the supplier has performed his contractual obligation or not; nor with the question whether the supplier is in default or not; and, subject to the fraud exception<sup>7</sup>, the bank must pay according to its guarantee, on demand, if so stipulated, without proof or conditions<sup>8</sup>. A performance bond is virtually a promissory note payable on demand<sup>9</sup>, and certainly has much more of the characteristics of a promissory note than of a guarantee<sup>10</sup>. The bank is simply concerned to see whether the event has happened upon which its obligation to pay arises<sup>11</sup>.

In the construction industry advance payment guarantees are often issued to employers who make stage payments to contractors<sup>12</sup>. Similarly, refund guarantees are a common feature of the shipbuilding industry. However, there is no standard practice in relation to such guarantees; they can either be in the form of independent performance bonds (or standby letters of credit) or true guarantees. The question as to what is the nature of such a guarantee involves construing the relevant instrument in its factual and contractual context having regard to its commercial purpose<sup>13</sup>.

1 'Standby credits' are sometimes used to perform the same function. These are letters of credit under which the beneficiary may draw on presentation of the specified documents, in some cases limited to a certificate prepared by the beneficiary. They are typically used in international sale contracts involving the United States of America where banks do not have power to issue performance guarantees or performance bonds: see 12 USC PARA 24, 7th Power. 'USC' means the Code of the Laws of the United States of America. As to letters of credit and performance bonds generally see PARA 923 et seq. The absence of language in a guarantee indicating that a performance bond has been created gives rise to a strong presumption that the parties did not intend to create a performance bond: Marubeni Hong Kong and South China Ltd v Government of Mongolia [2005] EWCA Civ 395, [2005] 2 All ER (Comm) 289, [2005] 1 WLR 2497. See also Van Der Merwe v IIG Capital LLC [2007] EWHC 2631 (Ch), [2007] All ER (D) 214 (Nov).

2 The difference between the terms 'performance bond' and 'performance guarantee' appears to be purely semantic.

3 Such a bond or guarantee may also go on to provide that such demand is itself conclusive evidence, as between bank and beneficiary, of the beneficiary's entitlement to recover under the guarantee or bond. Such a provision is valid: Bache & Co (London) Ltd v Banque Vernes et Commerciale de Paris SA [1973] 2 Lloyd's Rep 437, CA. However, the mere provision for payment on demand achieves a similar effect: see the cases cited in note 4. Where, however, the bond or guarantee provides that the beneficiary is entitled to payment in certain stipulated circumstances, it has been held that the beneficiary must, when making the demand for payment, commit himself to claiming that the stipulated event has occurred (see Esal (Commodities) and Reltor Ltd v Oriental Credit Ltd and Wells Fargo Bank NA, Banque du Caire SA v Wells Fargo Bank SA [1985] 2 Lloyd's Rep 546 at 550, CA); but, unless the bond expressly requires the beneficiary to specify the details of the alleged breach, it is enough, where the bond so requires, that the beneficiary describes the nature of that breach (Odebrecht Oil and Gas Services Ltd v North Sea Production Co Ltd [1999] 2 All ER (Comm) 405). As to the validity of a demand see PARA 1273.

6 United City Merchants (Investments) Ltd v Royal Bank of Canada [1983] 1 AC 168 at 184, [1982] 2 All ER 720 at 725, HL. However, performance bonds, unlike letters of credit, do not provide any security to the issuer: see Potton Homes Ltd v Coleman Contractors Ltd (1984) 28 BLR 19 at 29, CA, per Eveleigh LJ. Moreover, the doctrine of strict compliance, which applies to letters of credit and requires that the documents presented thereunder conform precisely to the letter of credit before there is payment, has no application to performance bonds: see Siporex Trade AS v Banque Indosuez [1986] 2 Lloyd's Rep 146 at 159 per Hirst J. As to the commercial advantages of a performance bond or an irrevocable letter of credit see eg Bolivinter Oil SA v Chase Manhattan Bank NA [1984] 1 All ER 351n at 352n, [1984] 1 WLR 392 at 393, CA, per Sir John Donaldson MR.

7 As to the fraud exception see PARA 1275. In the context of a claim by the beneficiary under the performance bond, where the issuer seeks to invoke the fraud exception, the court will, at the summary judgment stage, assess the weight of the evidence of fraud then before the court, or from which fraud can be inferred, and can either refuse judgment or enter judgment with a stay of execution: see Balfour Beatty Civil Engineering v Technical & General Guarantee Co Ltd (1999) 68 ConLR 180, [1999] All ER (D) 1110, CA. However, the fraud must be one which can be shown to have come to the knowledge of the issuer in time: see Czarnikow-Rionda Sugar Trading Inc v Standard Bank London Ltd [1999] 1 All ER (Comm) 890, [1999] 2 Lloyd's Rep 187; but see Banco Santander SA v Bayfern Ltd [1999] 2 All ER (Comm) 18; affd [2000] 1 All ER (Comm) 776, CA.

The question whether or not there has been compliance is for the issuer alone to determine, at the time when a demand is made: see Ermis Skai Radio and Television v Banque Indosuez SA (26 February 1997, unreported), Comm Ct, per Thomas J.

12 A guarantee for the repayment of an advance payment is not a performance guarantee: Wardens etc of the Mercers' Co v New Hampshire Insurance Co [1992] 2 Lloyd's Rep 365, CA.

13 See Gold Coast Ltd v Caja de Ahorros del Mediterraneo [2001] EWCA Civ 1086 at [11], [2002] 1 All ER (Comm) 142, [2002] 1 Lloyd's Rep 617 per Tuckey LJ. In that case, it was held that the instrument in question had all the appearances of a first demand guarantee. GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(8) CONTRACTS OF INDEMNITY/(ii) Performance Bonds/1272. Construction in accordance with proper law.

1272. Construction in accordance with proper law.

As with any other contract, the effect and construction of a performance bond falls to be determined in accordance with its proper law or (to use an alternative expression) the law applicable to it<sup>1</sup>. A performance bond given by or on behalf of a party to the underlying contract is normally governed by the law of the place where payment under it is to be made, and not necessarily by the law of the underlying contract<sup>2</sup>. Absent any contractual term as to the place of payment, that place is the place where the demand is made and where the liability crystallises<sup>3</sup>. If, however, a counter-guarantee is given by one bank to another which has issued a performance bond, the proper law<sup>4</sup> of the performance bond may be the proper law of the counter-guarantee<sup>5</sup>.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(8) CONTRACTS OF INDEMNITY/(ii) Performance Bonds/1273. Demand must be made within stipulated time and in stipulated form.

1273. Demand must be made within stipulated time and in stipulated form.

The International Chamber of Commerce has published a standard set of rules, known as the Uniform Rules for Demand Guarantees ('URDG')<sup>1</sup>, which may be incorporated into performance bonds and performance guarantees, which require the beneficiary, normally the buyer, to support his demand by a written statement stating that the account party, typically the seller, is in breach of the contract of sale and indicating the respect in which the seller is in breach<sup>2</sup>. It is open for sellers to insist with their buyers that any performance bond they are prevailed on by their buyers to procure will incorporate the URDG.

The beneficiary must have done that which for the purpose of making a valid demand is required of him<sup>3</sup>. However, a demand required to state that it was based on a claim for damages for breach of contract is valid if it says so in substance but not in express words<sup>4</sup>. On the other hand, it has been held that the words 'we claim the sum of £500,000, P having failed to meet their contractual obligations to us' did not comply with the requirement of the performance guarantee that the claims should state that the principals had failed to pay under their contractual obligation, since the key concept underlying the wording of the guarantee was a 'failure to pay'; accordingly, the demand was not valid<sup>5</sup>. Oral demands are permissible, if provided for by the bond document, but the court will be very hesitant to construe a performance bond as payable on oral demand by the beneficiary<sup>6</sup>. The court must construe the performance bond to determine what the beneficiary must do to make an effective call under it; then it must construe the call documentation to determine whether it complies with the requirements of the bond<sup>7</sup>.

1 See the Uniform Rules for Demand Guarantees ('URDG') (1992, ICC Publication No 458). At the date at which this volume states the law, a revision of the Rules is under way.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(8) CONTRACTS OF INDEMNITY/(ii) Performance Bonds/1274. Liability to account.

1274. Liability to account.

Once payment has been made under the performance bond or performance guarantee, it is implicit in the nature of the bond or guarantee that, in the absence of clear stipulation to the contrary, there will be a financial adjustment between the parties, ensuring that the beneficiary retains so much of the funds paid under the bond or guarantee as represents the real loss arising from the breach of contract committed by the other party to the contract of sale<sup>1</sup>.

See also Spiersbridge Property Developments Ltd v Muir Construction Ltd [2008] CSOH 44, 2008 Scot (D) 17/3. As to letters of credit and performance bonds generally see PARA 923 et seq.

GUARANTEE AND INDEMNITY/(8) CONTRACTS OF INDEMNITY/(ii) Performance Bonds/1275. Circumstances in which payment may be restrained.

1275. Circumstances in which payment may be restrained.

The account party may, exceptionally<sup>1</sup>, apply for an injunction to restrain the bank which is liable to pay under the performance bond from making such payment. If there is no challenge to the validity of the performance bond or performance guarantee itself, or if the challenge is not substantial, prima facie no injunction to restrain payment should be granted and the bank should be left free to honour its contractual obligation, although restrictions may well be imposed on the freedom of the beneficiary to deal with the money after he has received it<sup>2</sup>.

An injunction may be granted where it is proved that the bank knows that any demand for payment already made or which may thereafter be made will clearly be fraudulent<sup>3</sup>. The evidence must be clear, both as to the fact of fraud and as to the bank's knowledge<sup>4</sup>. In so challenging a demand made on a performance bond, the challenging party must show that the only inference the bank concerned could draw was that the demand was fraudulent; in doing so, it must put before the bank irrefutable evidence because it is not for the bank to verify mere allegations<sup>5</sup>. Strong corroborative evidence is required to establish fraud which usually takes the form of contemporary documents<sup>6</sup>.

- 59 (1) where there is breach of faith by a beneficiary in threatening a call on the bond<sup>8</sup>;
- 60 (2) where a call would be invalid, for example where a condition precedent to a call has not yet been fulfilled, where the bond is a 'see to it' bond necessitating prior proof of loss by the beneficiary or poor performance by the third party which has not yet been established, or where the demand or the supporting documents show that the demand does not conform to the requirements imposed by the bond for a valid demand<sup>9</sup>;
- 61 (3) where payment is prohibited by a sanctions order<sup>10</sup>.

A performance bond issued by a company which does not comply with the mandatory requirements of the Companies Act 1985 regarding the use of the company seal<sup>11</sup> is not for that reason expressly rendered illegal, a nullity or unenforceable<sup>12</sup>.

1 'The unique value of [an irrevocable] letter [of credit], performance bond or [performance] guarantee is that the beneficiary can be completely satisfied that, whatever disputes may thereafter arise between him and the bank's customer in relation to the performance or indeed existence of the underlying contract, the bank is personally undertaking to pay him provided that the specified conditions are met. . . . If, save in the most exceptional cases, he is to be allowed to derogate from the bank's personal and irrevocable undertaking, given . . . at his request, by obtaining an injunction restraining the bank from honouring that undertaking, he will undermine what is the bank's greatest asset, however large and rich it may be, namely its reputation for financial and contractual probity. Furthermore, if this happens at all frequently, the value of all irrevocable letters of credit and performance bonds and [performance] guarantees will be undermined': Bolivinter Oil SA v Chase Manhattan Bank NA [1984] 1 All ER 351n at 352n, [1984] 1 WLR 392 at 393, CA, per Sir John Donaldson MR. The account party may obtain a freezing injunction against the beneficiary restraining him from dealing with the proceeds: see eg Intraco Ltd v Notis Shipping Corpn, The Bhoja Trader [1981] 2 Lloyd's Rep 256, [1981] Com LR 184, CA. Payment into court can be ordered (see Themehelp Ltd v West [1996] QB 84 at 103, [1995] 4 All ER 215 at 231, CA, per Evans LJ); but this will probably not be ordered if the performance bond requires payment to be made abroad (see Britten-Norman Ltd v State Ownership Fund of Romania [2000] Lloyd's Rep Bank 315). The primary function of money is to serve as a medium of exchange, and as such it is accepted without question in final discharge of debts or payment for goods or services<sup>1</sup>. Money also serves as a common standard of value by reference to which the comparative values of different commodities are ascertained<sup>2</sup>, as a unit of account in which debts and liabilities are expressed<sup>3</sup>, and as a store of value or purchasing power<sup>4</sup>.

1277. Meaning of 'money'.

The term 'money' generally includes banknotes<sup>1</sup> as well as coins<sup>2</sup>, although it may be limited to such of each as are legal tender<sup>3</sup> at the time and place in question. The term is sometimes used to include not only actual cash but also a right to receive cash, as, for example, sums standing to the credit of a bank account<sup>4</sup> or invested in securities<sup>5</sup>; and the term may in some cases be used in a popular sense to include all personal or even, exceptionally, all real and personal property<sup>6</sup>. Where the term 'money' is used in relation to the payment of money into court it is to be construed in its ordinary and natural meaning as including money in foreign currency<sup>7</sup>.

The precise meaning of the term depends upon the context in which it is used<sup>8</sup> so that, for example, it is usually given a wide meaning when used in a will and when that meaning gives effect to the intention of the testator<sup>9</sup>, an intermediate meaning in connection with claims for money paid or for money had and received<sup>10</sup>, and a narrow meaning in the criminal law<sup>11</sup> and in relation to execution<sup>12</sup>. In taxing or other statutes, references to money may be limited to sterling or may include foreign currencies, depending on the wording and purpose of the statute<sup>13</sup>.

1278. Legal money.

The tokens known as 'money', which constitute a legal medium of exchange, consist in England either of coins<sup>1</sup> made and issued by the Crown under the exclusive powers it enjoys at common law, which are now for the most part regulated by statute<sup>2</sup>, or of bank notes made and issued by the Bank of England under statutory powers<sup>3</sup>.

The special statutory offences relating to the coinage are discussed elsewhere in this work<sup>4</sup>.

1 See generally Sir CWC Oman The Coinage of England (1931). As to coins as legal tender see PARA 1279.

2 At common law the Crown enjoys the exclusive right of making and issuing money, though formerly this right was frequently granted out as a franchise and could be claimed by prescription; but in all cases the impression or stamping of coins was the Crown's prerogative, and the grantees of the franchise usually had the stamp sent to them by the Exchequer: 1 Bl Com (14th Edn) 277. The denomination or value at which the coin was to pass current was also determined by the Crown in all cases, though it seems that the value could not be debased or enhanced below or above the sterling value: 1 Bl Com (14th Edn) 277-278; 2 Co Inst 577. But as to enhancing or debasing the coinage see contra 1 Hale PC 194. These prerogative rights still exist, but have for the most part been placed upon a statutory basis: see PARA 1282. Where no statutory provision has been made, Her Majesty is empowered by proclamation made with the advice of the Privy Council to regulate any matters relating to the coinage within the prerogative, and to revoke or alter any proclamation previously made: see the Coinage Act 1971 s 3(1)(g), (h) (s 3(1) renumbered by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(4)(f)).

(A) LEGAL TENDER, ISSUE OF COINS AND THE MINT

1279. Legal tender in coins.

Gold coins<sup>1</sup> are legal tender for payment of any amount<sup>2</sup>. Subject to any provision made by proclamation<sup>3</sup>, coins of cupro-nickel, silver or bronze are legal tender as follows: coins of cupro-nickel or silver of denominations<sup>4</sup> of more than 10 pence, for payment of any amount not exceeding £10; coins of cupro-nickel or silver of denominations of not more than 10 pence, for payment of any amount not exceeding £5; coins of bronze, for payment of any amount not exceeding 20 pence<sup>5</sup>. Other coins, if made current by a proclamation<sup>6</sup> are legal tender in accordance with the provision made by that proclamation or by any later proclamation<sup>7</sup>.

1 'Coins' means coins made by the Mint in accordance with the Coinage Act 1971 and not called in by proclamation under s 3 (see PARA 1282): s 2(3) (added by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(3)(c)). As to the Mint see PARA 1281.

2 Coinage Act 1971 s 2(1) (substituted by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(3)(a)). They are not legal tender if their weight has become less than that specified in the Coinage Act 1971 s 1, Sch 1 (see PARA 1285), or in the proclamation under which they are made, as the least current weight: s 2(1) (as so substituted). Coins that are not legal tender may, however, be accepted as a means of payment. As to legal money see also PARA 1278.

3 Ie under the Coinage Act 1971 s 3: see PARA 1282.

4 References to coins of any denomination include references to coins treated as being of such a denomination by virtue of a proclamation made in pursuance of the Decimal Currency Act 1969 s 15(5) (repealed): Coinage Act 1971 s 2(2) (amended by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(3)(b)). No piece of gold, silver, copper or bronze, or of any metal or mixed metal, of any value whatever, may be made or issued except by or with the authority of the Treasury, as a coin or a token for money, or as purporting that its holder is entitled to demand any value denoted on it<sup>1</sup>. Anyone contravening this provision is liable on summary conviction to a fine<sup>2</sup>.

2 Coinage Act 1971 s 9(2) (amended by virtue of the Criminal Justice Act 1982 ss 37, 46). The penalty is a fine not exceeding level 2 on the standard scale: see the Coinage Act 1971 s 9(2) (as so amended). As to the standard scale see PARA 27 note 21.

A penalty was imposed under earlier legislation (ie the Coinage Act 1870 s 5 (repealed)) on the owner of Lundy Island for unlawfully issuing 'puffins' and 'half-puffins' as tokens for money within the island: Harman v Bolt (1931) 47 TLR 219.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer is the master of the Mint<sup>1</sup>. There is also a deputy master appointed by the Treasury<sup>2</sup>. All duties, powers and authorities imposed on, vested in or to be transacted before the master of the Mint may be performed and exercised by or transacted before him or his sufficient deputy<sup>3</sup>. The Mint is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration<sup>4</sup>.

Provision is made for the funding of the Mint<sup>5</sup>.

1 Coinage Act 1971 s 4(1). The Mint was originally established in the Tower of London but moved to the Mint on Tower Hill in 1810. It is now at Llantrisant, Pontyclun, Mid-Glamorgan. As to the Mint see Sir John Craig The Mint (1953). As to the Chancellor of the Exchequer see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 514.

4 See the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967 s 4(1), Sch 2; and ADMINISTRATIVE LAW vol 1(1) (2001 Reissue) PARA 41 et seq.

5 Expenses incurred by the Mint in the purchase of metal to be made into coins are to be defrayed out of money provided by Parliament, and all sums received by the master of the Mint or any deputy master or officer of the Mint in payment for coin made from metal purchased by him and all fees and payments received by him in that capacity are to be paid into the Consolidated Fund: Coinage Act 1971 s 4(6), (7). As to the Consolidated Fund see PARA 1334; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 711 et seq; PARLIAMENT vol 78 (2010) PARA 1028 et seq. However, these provisions do not have effect for so long as any operations of the Mint are funded operations: Government Trading Funds Act 1973 s 7(2) (amended by the Government Trading Act 1990 s 2(4)). The Mint is a funded operation: see the Royal Mint Trading Fund Order 1975, SI 1975/501; and the Royal Mint Trading Fund (Extension and Variation) Order 2002, SI 2002/831. ## (B) DIMENSIONS, DESIGNS, DENOMINATIONS AND STANDARDS OF COINS

1282. Prerogative rights as to coins.

By the royal prerogative the Crown enjoys the exclusive right of fixing the dimensions, designs, denominations and standards of weight and fineness of the various current coins<sup>1</sup>. Since 1870 that prerogative power has been limited by<sup>2</sup> and its exercise regulated by statute<sup>3</sup>. Under the Coinage Act 1971 Her Majesty may from time to time by proclamation made with the advice of Her Privy Council<sup>4</sup>:

- 62 (1) determine the denomination of coins to be made at the Mint<sup>5</sup>;
- 63 (2) determine the design of any coin<sup>6</sup>;
- 64 (3) determine the weight and fineness of any gold coins or coins of silver of the Queen's Maundy money<sup>7</sup>, the remedy to be allowed in making them and (for gold coins) their least current weight<sup>8</sup>;
- 65 (4) determine the weight and composition of any coins, other than gold coins or coins of silver of the Queen's Maundy money, and the remedy (if any) to be allowed in making them<sup>9</sup>;
- 66 (5) provide for the variation from the specified standard weight for a gold coin<sup>10</sup> to be measured in the manner specified in the proclamation<sup>11</sup>;
- 67 (6) determine the dimensions of any coins<sup>12</sup>;
- 68 (7) determine the percentage of impurities which coins other than gold coins and coins of silver of the Queen's Maundy money may contain<sup>13</sup>;
- 69 (8) call in coins of any date or denomination, or coins made before a date specified in the proclamation<sup>14</sup>;
- 70 (9) direct that coins made by the Mint other than gold, silver, cupro-nickel and bronze coins are to be current<sup>15</sup>;
- 71 (10) direct that any coin is to be legal tender for payment of any amount not exceeding such amount as may be specified in the proclamation or for payment of any amount (without limit)<sup>16</sup>;
- 72 (11) regulate any matter relating to coinage which was before 1870 within the royal prerogative and is not provided for by the Coinage Acts 1870 and 1971<sup>17</sup>; and
- 73 (12) revoke or alter any proclamation so made<sup>18</sup>.

1 1 BI Com (14th Edn) 277-278. The standard is determined by the fineness, and the true standard is termed 'sterling'. As to the present standard see PARA 1284 et seq. Where in early days the making of coins was granted out by the Crown in the form of franchises to monasteries and others, the Crown always retained the right of regulating the stamp or impression and denomination, and the grantees of those franchises usually had the Exchequer stamp sent to them: 1 BI Com (14th Edn) 277.

2 As to the standards fixed for the weight and fineness of certain coins see the Coinage Act 1870 s 3, Sch 1 (repealed); and the Coinage Act 1971 s 1(3), Sch 1; and PARA 1285.

3 See the Coinage Act 1870 s 11 (repealed); Coinage Act 1971 s 3; and the text to notes 5-18.

4 Proclamations determining the specifications and design of coins are published periodically in the London Gazette but are not listed in this work.

- 13 Coinage Act 1971 s 3(1)(dd) (added by the Currency Act 1983 Act s 1(4)(c)). Where a proclamation is made as to the percentage of impurities which coins of a particular denomination may contain, any coin of that denomination made before the date of the proclamation is treated as if that provision had been in force when that coin was made: Currency Act 1983 s 1(5).
- 14 Coinage Act 1971 s 3(1)(e).
- 15 Coinage Act 1971 s 3(1)(f) (amended by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(4)(d)).
- 16 Coinage Act 1971 s 3(1)(ff) (added by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(4)(e)). As to coins as legal tender see PARAS 1278, 1279. So far as it relates to the matters mentioned in the Coinage Act 1971 s 3(1)(ff), a proclamation may make different provisions in relation to different parts of the United Kingdom: s 3(2) (added by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(4)(f)). As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 2 note 3. Both the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man (although not within the United Kingdom) use the pound sterling.

1283. Denominations of money.

The denominations of money in the currency of the United Kingdom<sup>1</sup> are the pound sterling and the penny (or new penny)<sup>2</sup>, the penny being one-hundredth part of a pound sterling<sup>3</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 2 note 3.

2 The penny may also be referred to as the new penny: Currency Act 1982 s 1(1).

3 Currency Act 1982 s 1(1). Decimalisation was introduced on 15 February 1971 (ie the day appointed under the Decimal Currency Act 1967 s 1 (repealed)). Prior to that date, the denominations were the pound sterling, the shilling and the penny, the shilling being one-twentieth part of a pound sterling and the penny being one-twelfth part of a shilling. The pound sterling was unchanged.

Transitional provisions, most of which are spent, provided rules for the invalidation of bills of exchange and promissory notes expressed in the old currency and for the conversion of references to shillings and pence in various documents, enactments and forms, including a power to make regulations for payments under friendly society and industrial insurance contracts: see the Decimal Currency Act 1969 ss 2-13 (amended by the Friendly Societies Act 1974 Sch 11; the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1989; SI 1995/710; and SI 2001/3647).

1284. Form, weight and fineness of coins.

Coins other than gold coins and coins of silver of the Queen's Maundy money<sup>1</sup> must be of specified standard weight, composition and dimensions<sup>2</sup>; but in the making of the coins a remedy<sup>3</sup> is to be allowed not exceeding a specified amount<sup>4</sup>.

1 As to gold coins and silver coins of the Queen's Maundy money see PARA 1285.

2 I.e. specified by proclamation under the Coinage Act 1971 s 3 (see PARA 1282): s 1(1), (4) (s 1 substituted by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(1)).

3 A 'remedy', in relation to gold coins and coins of silver of the Queen's Maundy money, is a variation from the standard weight and fineness specified in the proclamation, and in relation to other coins (i.e. cupro-nickel coins), from the standard diameter and composition so specified: Coinage Act 1971 s 1(7) (as substituted: see note 2).

4 Coinage Act 1971 s 1(5) (as substituted: see note 2). The variation from the standard weight of any coins is to be measured as the average of a sample of not more than 1 kg of that coin: s 1(6) (as so substituted).

1285. Maundy money.

The Queen's Maundy money is issued each year for distribution as a royal bounty by the Lord High Almoner on Maundy Thursday<sup>1</sup>. It consists of gold £5, £2, sovereign (£1), and half sovereign coins, and silver 4p, 3p, 2p and 1p coins. Gold coins and coins of silver of the Queen's Maundy money are to be of specified standard weight and fineness<sup>2</sup>, but in the making of the coins a variation from the specified standard weight and fineness is allowed<sup>3</sup>.

1 I.e. the Thursday before Easter. The word 'Maundy' derives from mandatum, middle English maundee or maund, a command (see Skeat, Etym Dict 359, Langland, Piers Plowman (Whitaker Edn) 140), the command being that given in John 13: 14 'to wash one another's feet'; and see John 13: 34 ('I give you a new commandment'). The practice of washing feet has not been observed since the reign of James II, but the distribution of alms is still made each year.

2 Coins of a denomination mentioned in the Coinage Act 1971 s 1, Sch 1 (amended by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(2)) must be of the weight and fineness specified there (Coinage Act 1971 s 1(1), (2) (s 1 substituted by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(1))); and coins of any other denomination must be of such weight and fineness as may be specified in a proclamation under the Coinage Act 1971 s 3 (see PARA 1282) (s 1(3) (as so substituted)).

1286. Standards.

From time to time when necessary the Secretary of State<sup>1</sup> must cause to be made and verified standard trial plates to be used for determining the justness of gold, silver and cupro-nickel coins issued from the Mint, or of coins so issued of any other metal or mixture of metals specified in a proclamation<sup>2</sup>.

The plates and all books, documents and other things used in connection with the determination of the justness of coins must be in the Secretary of State's custody, and must be kept in accordance with his directions; and the performance of all duties in relation to the plates is to be part of the business of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory of the Department for Innovation, Universities and Skills<sup>3</sup>.

The master of the Mint must from time to time cause copies to be made of the coinage standards<sup>4</sup> maintained by the Secretary of State, and once at least in every year the Secretary of State and the master of the Mint must cause the copies to be compared with the coinage standards<sup>5</sup>.

1 As to the Secretary of State see PARA 3.

2 Coinage Act 1971 s 6(1). As to the power to specify by proclamation the composition of coins see s 3(1) (cc); and PARA 1282. As to the Mint see PARA 1281. The plates must be of the following composition: for gold coins of a denomination mentioned in the Coinage Act 1971 Sch 1 (see PARA 1285), eleven-twelfths fine gold and one-twelfth alloy; for other gold coins, gold of the standard fineness specified in the proclamation under which the coins are made; for silver coins, pure silver; for cupro-nickel coins, pure copper and pure nickel; for coins of any other metal or mixture of metals, such composition as may be prescribed by the proclamation under which the coins are made: Coinage Act 1971 s 6(2) (amended by the Currency Act 1983 s 1(6)).

1287. Trial.

For the purpose of ascertaining that coins issued from the Mint have been coined in accordance with the Coinage Act 1971, a trial of the pyx<sup>1</sup> must be held at least once in every year in which coins have been issued<sup>2</sup>. Her Majesty may from time to time by Order in Council make provisions with respect to the trial of the pyx and all matters incidental to it<sup>3</sup>, and in particular with respect to:

- 74 (1) the time and place of the trial<sup>4</sup>;

- 75 (2) setting apart out of the coins issued by the Mint certain coins for the trial<sup>5</sup>;
- 76 (3) summoning a jury of not less than six competent freemen of the Mystery of Goldsmiths of the City of London or other competent persons<sup>6</sup>;
- 77 (4) the attendance at the trial of the jury and the proper officers of the Treasury, the Department for Innovation, Universities and Skills and the Mint, and the production of the coins, the standard trial plates and the standard weights<sup>7</sup>;
- 78 (5) the proceedings at and the conduct of the trial, including the nomination of a person to preside and the method of examining the coins<sup>8</sup>;
- 79 (6) the recording and publication of the verdict, the custody of the record and any proceedings to be taken in consequence of the verdict<sup>9</sup>.

An Order in Council made under this power may be revoked or amended by a subsequent Order in Council<sup>10</sup>.

1 The pyx (from the Greek 'pyxis', meaning a box or container) is the name given to the chest in which the sample coins were deposited for the purpose of trying the issue whether the coins made by the Mint were of the required standard. As to the Mint see PARA 1281.

The rules and procedure to be observed at the trial of the pyx<sup>1</sup> are regulated by Orders in Council<sup>2</sup>, under which at least once every year a warrant, in the form provided, is issued by the Commissioners of the Treasury<sup>3</sup>, signed by any two or more of them, appointing a day for the trial to be held at the Goldsmiths' Hall in the City of London, or, if that place is not available, then at such other place as the commissioners think fit<sup>4</sup>. The warrant is delivered to the Queen's Remembrancer, who presides at the trial<sup>5</sup>.

Notice of the time appointed for the trial must be given by the Treasury to the proper officers of the Department for Innovation, Universities and Skills (requiring them to produce the standard trial plates and weights and all other things in their possession usually produced at the trial of the pyx)<sup>6</sup>, to the deputy master of the Mint<sup>7</sup>, and to any other persons whose presence is thought necessary<sup>8</sup>.

1290. Selection and trial of coins.

The deputy master of the Mint must cause a minimum number of coins to be randomly selected and set apart with a view to the trial of the pyx<sup>1</sup>. One coin must be set apart out of every 2,000 gold coins ready for issue<sup>2</sup>, one out of every 150 platinum coins<sup>3</sup>, one out of every 150 silver Maundy coins<sup>4</sup>, one out of every 3,000 silver coins<sup>5</sup>, one out of every 3,000 gold-plated silver coins<sup>6</sup>, one out of every 5,000 cupro-nickel coins of a denomination of more than 10 pence<sup>7</sup>, one out of every 20,000 cupro-nickel coins of 10 pence or less<sup>8</sup> (provided that the total number of cupro-nickel coins subject to trial is greater than 250 million per year; if less than 250 million, one coin out of every 5,000 irrespective of denomination)<sup>9</sup>, one out of every 5,000 nickel-brass coins<sup>10</sup>, and one out of every 5,000 bimetallic coins<sup>11</sup>. However, the deputy master of the Mint must ensure that of the coins ready for issue not less than ten coins of each denomination (other than silver Maundy coins or platinum coins) and, in the case of silver Maundy coins or platinum coins, not less than ten such coins, are to be selected at random and set apart, irrespective of the number of such coins that are ready for issue<sup>12</sup>.

The coins set apart must be sealed up in separate packets at the Mint before being taken to the trial<sup>13</sup>. The jury must ascertain the number of coins in each packet produced to it and check that that number corresponds with the numbers represented by the officers of the Mint<sup>14</sup>.

1291. Trial of gold coins.

For the purpose of the trial of the gold coins, the jury must take out from each packet of gold coins<sup>1</sup> as many coins as it thinks necessary, and weigh them in bulk so as to ascertain whether they are on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>2</sup>. It must then group them by type and melt them into separate ingots for each type of gold coin and assay each ingot, comparing it with the standard trial plates of gold so as to ascertain whether the metal of the ingot is within the permitted variation from the standard fineness<sup>3</sup>. The residue of the coins remaining in the packets must then be weighed in bulk so as to ascertain whether they are on the whole within the permitted variation as to weight<sup>4</sup>, and then the jury must take out of the residue as many coins as it thinks fit and weigh and assay them separately<sup>5</sup>.

For the purpose of the trial of the platinum coins, the jury must take out all the coins from the packets of platinum coins<sup>1</sup> and:

- 80 (1) weigh the coins in bulk so as to ascertain whether they are on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>2</sup>; and

- 81 (2) after weighing the coins, group them by type and assay such number of coins as it thinks fit, comparing them with the standard trial plate of platinum, so as to ascertain whether the metal of the coins of each type is on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard composition<sup>3</sup>.

1293. Trial of silver Maundy coins.

For the purpose of the trial of silver Maundy coins<sup>1</sup>, the jury must take out all the coins from the packets of silver coins<sup>2</sup> and weigh them in bulk so as to ascertain whether they are on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>3</sup>. It must then assay such number of coins as it thinks fit, comparing them with the standard trial plates of silver, so as to ascertain whether the metal of the coins is on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard fineness<sup>4</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'Maundy coins' see PARA 1290 note 4.

2 As to the selection of coins and the sealing of them into packets see PARA 1290. As to the jury see PARA 1289.

1294. Trial of silver coins other than Maundy coins, cupro-nickel coins, nickel-brass coins, gold-plated silver coins and bimetallic coins.

For the purpose of the trial of the silver coins that are not Maundy coins<sup>1</sup> and cupro-nickel coins, the jury must ascertain whether or not all the coins in the packets of silver coins that are not Maundy coins and cupro-nickel coins weigh more than 500 g, and whether or not the coins of each denomination in the packets weigh more than 1 kg<sup>2</sup>.

If the coins of any denomination weigh in all more than 1 kg, the jury must take from each packet as many coins of that denomination as it thinks fit, group them into lots weighing not less than 980 g nor more than 1 kg each and weigh each lot in bulk so as to ascertain whether the coins in it are on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>3</sup>. The jury must weigh in bulk the residue of the coins remaining in the packets, so as to ascertain whether they are on the whole within the permitted variation<sup>4</sup>. If the coins of any denomination weigh in all not more than 1 kg, the jury must weigh all of them in bulk so as to ascertain whether they are on the whole within the permitted variation<sup>5</sup>. If the coins weigh in all more than 500 g, the jury must assay such number of coins as it thinks fit, not weighing less in all than 500 g; if they weigh less than 500 g, the jury must assay all of them<sup>6</sup>.

In assaying the coins, the jury must compare them with the standard plate of silver (in the case of silver coins other than Maundy coins) and with the standard plates of copper and nickel (in the case of cupro-nickel coins) so as to ascertain whether the metal of the coins is on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard composition<sup>7</sup>.

If the number of cupro-nickel coins of any denomination is more than ten, the jury must measure the diameter of not less than ten and not more than twenty coins of that denomination; but if the number is not more than ten the jury must measure the diameter of all of them<sup>8</sup>. In measuring the diameter of the coins of any denomination the jury must ascertain whether their average diameter is within the permitted variation from the standard diameter<sup>9</sup>.

1295. Findings of the jury.

By its verdict the jury<sup>1</sup> must find:

- 82 (1) whether the metal of the ingot for each type of gold coin is within the permitted variation from the standard fineness<sup>2</sup>;
- 83 (2) whether each group of gold coins weighed in bulk is on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>3</sup>;
- 84 (3) whether each of the gold coins separately weighed and assayed is within the permitted variations as to weight and fineness<sup>4</sup>;
- 85 (4) whether the platinum coins weighed and those assayed are on the whole respectively within the permitted variations from the standard weight and composition<sup>5</sup>;
- 86 (5) whether the silver Maundy coins weighed and those assayed are on the whole respectively within the permitted variations from the standard weight and fineness<sup>6</sup>;
- 87 (6) whether each group of silver coins other than Maundy coins which has been weighed in bulk is on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>7</sup>;
- 88 (7) whether the silver coins other than Maundy coins which have been assayed are on the whole within the permitted variations from the standard composition<sup>8</sup>;
- 89 (8) whether each group of gold-plated silver coins weighed in bulk is on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>9</sup>;
- 90 (9) whether the gold-plated silver coins assayed are on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard composition, and, in relation to the gold plating, within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>10</sup>;
- 91 (10) whether each group of cupro-nickel coins weighed in bulk is on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>11</sup>;
- 92 (11) whether the cupro-nickel coins assayed are on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard composition<sup>12</sup>;
- 93 (12) whether the average diameter of the cupro-nickel coins measured is within the permitted variations from the standard diameter<sup>13</sup>;
- 94 (13) whether each group of nickel-brass coins weighed in bulk is on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>14</sup>;
- 95 (14) whether the nickel-brass coins assayed are on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard composition<sup>15</sup>;
- 96 (15) whether the average diameter of the nickel-brass coins measured is within the permitted variation from the standard diameter<sup>16</sup>;
- 97 (16) whether each group of bimetallic coins weighed in bulk is on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard weight<sup>17</sup>;
- 98 (17) whether the bimetallic coins assayed are on the whole within the permitted variations from the standard composition in relation to their inner and outer sections<sup>18</sup>; and
- 99 (18) whether the average diameter of the bimetallic coins measured is on the whole within the permitted variation from the standard diameter<sup>19</sup>.

If the jury finds that in any case there is a variation from the standard weight or fineness or composition or diameter, it must specify in its verdict the amount of the variation<sup>20</sup>. The verdict of the jury must be in writing and signed by each of the jurymen<sup>21</sup>. It is to be handed to the Queen's Remembrancer who authenticates it with his signature, deposits it among the records of his office and delivers a copy of it to the Treasury<sup>22</sup>. The Queen's Remembrancer must direct that the verdict, or those parts of the verdict which he considers appropriate, be read aloud in his presence<sup>23</sup>. The Treasury must deliver one copy of the verdict to the Department for Innovation, Universities and Skills, and another copy to the deputy master of the Mint<sup>24</sup>, and must publish the verdict in such manner as the Treasury considers appropriate<sup>25</sup>.

1296. Coins not to be melted down or broken up without licence.

Coins which are current in the United Kingdom<sup>1</sup> or which, having been current there, have ceased to be so at any time after 16 May 1969, must not be melted down or broken up without a licence from the Treasury<sup>2</sup>. Any person contravening this is liable on conviction to a penalty<sup>3</sup>. If any condition attached to such a licence<sup>4</sup> is contravened or not complied with, the person to whom the licence was granted is liable on conviction to a penalty unless he proves that the contravention or non-compliance occurred without his consent or connivance and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent it<sup>5</sup>. Whether or not it imposes any other punishment, the court before which a person is convicted of an offence may order the articles in respect of which the offence was committed to be forfeited to the Crown<sup>6</sup>. Where an offence committed by a body corporate is proved to have been committed with the consent or connivance of, or to be attributable to any neglect on the part of, any director, manager, secretary or other similar officer of the body corporate or any person who was purporting to act in any such capacity, he as well as the body corporate is guilty of that offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly<sup>7</sup>.

C. BANK NOTES

1297. Bank notes.

The Bank of England has the exclusive right of note issue in England and Wales<sup>1</sup>. The Bank may issue bank notes of such denominations as the Treasury may approve and no others<sup>2</sup>.

1 See the Bank Charter Act 1844 s 11; and PARA 796. Only Bank of England notes are legal tender in England and Wales; notes that are not legal tender may, however, be accepted as a means of payment. As to legal money see also PARA 1278. As to bank notes see also PARA 796 et seq. As to the Bank of England see PARA 793 et seq.

2 See the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1954 s 1(1); and PARA 796. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

MONEY/(1) MONEY AND INTEREST ON MONEY/(i) Money/D. COUNTERFEIT COINS AND NOTES/1298. Offences relating to counterfeit coins and notes.

D. COUNTERFEIT COINS AND NOTES

1298. Offences relating to counterfeit coins and notes.

There are various offences in relation to the making, passing, tendering and delivering of a counterfeit of a currency note or of a protected coin<sup>1</sup>; and the importation, landing, unloading or exportation<sup>2</sup> of a counterfeit of a currency note or of a protected coin without the consent of the Treasury is prohibited<sup>3</sup>.

1 As to counterfeiting offences, and the penalties for them, see the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 ss 14-19, 22; and CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 544 et seq. As to forgery generally see CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 346 et seq.

'Currency note' means: (1) any note which has been lawfully issued in England and Wales, Scotland, Northern Ireland, any of the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland and is or has been customarily used as money in the country where it was issued and which is payable on demand; or (2) any note which has been lawfully issued in any other country and is customarily used as money in that country: s 27(1).

'Protected coin' means any coin which is customarily used as money in any country or is specified in an order made by the Treasury: s 27(1). See the Forgery and Counterfeiting (Protected Coins) Order 1981, SI 1981/1505, specifying sovereign, half-sovereign, Krugerrand, any coin denominated as a fraction of a Krugerrand and Maria-Theresia thaler bearing the date 1780. See also the Forgery and Counterfeiting (Protected Coins) Order 1999, SI 1999/2095, specifying euro coins. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

A thing is a counterfeit of a currency note or protected coin if it is not a currency note or protected coin but resembles a currency note or protected coin (whether on one side or both) to such an extent that it is reasonably capable of passing for a currency note or protected coin of that description, or if it is a currency note or protected coin which has been so altered that it is reasonably capable of passing for a currency note or protected coin of some other description: Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 s 28(1).

2 A counterfeit of a currency note or protected coin which is removed from the United Kingdom to the Isle of Man is deemed to be exported for the purposes of this provision: Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 s 21(2). As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 2 note 3.

3 See the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 ss 20, 21; and CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(1) (2006 Reissue) PARA 551. As to penalties for importation contrary to this prohibition see the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 s 50; and CUSTOMS AND EXCISE vol 12(3) (2007 Reissue) PARA 994. As to penalties for exportation contrary to this prohibition see the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 s 68; and CUSTOMS AND EXCISE vol 12(3) (2007 Reissue) PARA 1029.

MONEY/(1) MONEY AND INTEREST ON MONEY/(i) Money/E. FOREIGN MONEY OBLIGATIONS/1299. Construction of references to foreign currency and to gold.

E. FOREIGN MONEY OBLIGATIONS

1299. Construction of references to foreign currency and to gold.

Where a debt is expressed in terms of a foreign currency, the reference to that currency may indicate the mode in which the debt is to be discharged or the means by which the amount of the debt is to be measured or both<sup>1</sup>.

Where English law is the proper law of the contract<sup>2</sup> under which a debt is payable, any reference in the contract to gold or gold coin will prima facie be construed as an indication of the means by which the amount of the debt is to be measured<sup>3</sup>, and not as a requirement to make actual payment in gold<sup>4</sup>; but in some cases a reference to gold in connection with a particular currency may be no more than part of the description of that currency<sup>5</sup>.

MONEY/(1) MONEY AND INTEREST ON MONEY/(i) Money/E. FOREIGN MONEY OBLIGATIONS/1300. Measure of liability.

1300. Measure of liability.

Where on the proper construction of the contract a particular currency, whether English<sup>1</sup> or foreign<sup>2</sup>, is referred to as providing the unit of account by reference to which the amount of the debt is to be measured, the measurement is to be made by reference to whatever at the time of payment is, according to the law of the country whose currency is referred to<sup>3</sup>, legal currency of the same nominal amount, regardless of any rise<sup>4</sup> or fall<sup>5</sup> in the real value or exchange value of the currency<sup>6</sup>. However, the parties to a contract may agree to value a debt by reference to an index so that the liability reflects the real value and not the nominal value of the currency<sup>7</sup>. If the units referred to are common to the currency of several countries (for example, pounds<sup>8</sup>, dollars<sup>9</sup> or francs<sup>10</sup>), including the country where payment is to be made, the contract will generally be construed as referring to the currency of the place of payment<sup>11</sup>, although this will not necessarily be so if there are other circumstances by reference to which the ambiguity can be resolved<sup>12</sup>.

MONEY/(1) MONEY AND INTEREST ON MONEY/(i) Money/E. FOREIGN MONEY OBLIGATIONS/1302. Foreign currency liabilities.

1302. Foreign currency liabilities.

Where a person brings a claim for a sum of money due under a contract he is entitled to claim<sup>1</sup> and obtain judgment for the amount of the debt expressed in the currency of a foreign country if the money of account and payment was of that country<sup>2</sup>. Where a charterparty provides for demurrage to be calculated in one currency, in the absence of any contrary provision it is a reasonable inference that it is to be paid in that currency<sup>3</sup>. The power to give judgment in a foreign currency is not confined to contracts whose proper law is the law of a foreign country<sup>4</sup>. The court also has power to award damages for negligence in a foreign currency where appropriate<sup>5</sup>.

If an obligation in the currency of a foreign country, although sued upon in England, is payable in that country, payment in that country in the currency which will discharge the obligation there discharges the obligation for the purposes of the English claim<sup>6</sup>.

(ii) Interest on Money

A. THE RIGHT TO INTEREST

1303. Interest in general.

Interest is the return or compensation for the use or retention by one person of a sum of money belonging to or owed to another<sup>1</sup>. Interest accrues from day to day even if payable only at intervals<sup>2</sup>, and is, therefore, apportionable in respect of time between persons entitled in succession to the principal<sup>3</sup>.

MONEY/(1) MONEY AND INTEREST ON MONEY/(ii) Interest on Money/A. THE RIGHT TO INTEREST/1304. Compound interest.

1304. Compound interest.

Compound interest was not usually allowed except where there was an agreement, express or implied<sup>1</sup>, to pay it<sup>2</sup>, or where the debtor had employed the money in trade and had presumably earned it<sup>3</sup>, or unless its allowance was in accordance with a usage of a particular trade or business<sup>4</sup>. However there are now indications that the courts have jurisdiction to award compound interest to a claimant seeking restitution of money paid under mistake when such an award would achieve a just result<sup>5</sup>. This is in line with a recommendation of the Law Commission and with Canadian authority on the matter<sup>6</sup>.

6 The Law Commission in its report, Pre-judgment Interest on Debts and Damages (Law Com No 287; February 2004), recommended that the court should have a discretion to award compound interest. MONEY/(1) MONEY AND INTEREST ON MONEY/(ii) Interest on Money/A. THE RIGHT TO INTEREST/1305. When interest is payable at common law.

1305. When interest is payable at common law.

At common law interest is payable<sup>1</sup>: (1) where there is an express agreement to pay interest<sup>2</sup>; (2) where an agreement to pay interest can be implied from the course of dealing between the parties<sup>3</sup> or from the nature of the transaction<sup>4</sup> or a custom or usage of the trade or profession concerned<sup>5</sup>; and (3) in certain cases by way of damages for breach of a contract<sup>6</sup>.

Except in the cases mentioned, debts do not carry interest at common law<sup>7</sup>.

1 Generally, a claim for interest must be pleaded: see DAMAGES vol 12(1) (Reissue) PARA 849. As to the content of a claim form see CPR 16.2; and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 585.

6 The courts were formerly reluctant to award interest by way of general damages for breach of an obligation to pay money: see London, Chatham and Dover Rly Co v South Eastern Rly Co [1893] AC 429, HL. However, artificialities of this kind have now been swept away by the House of Lords: see Sempre Metals Ltd v Inland Revenue Commissioners [2007] UKHL 34, [2007] All ER (D) 294 (Jul). ### 1306. Equitable right to interest.

In equity interest may be recovered in certain cases where a particular relationship exists between the creditor and the debtor, such as mortgagor and mortgagee<sup>1</sup>, obligor and obligee on a bond<sup>2</sup>, personal representative and beneficiary<sup>3</sup>, principal and surety<sup>4</sup>, vendor and purchaser<sup>5</sup>, principal and agent<sup>6</sup>, solicitor and client<sup>7</sup>, trustee and beneficiary<sup>8</sup>, pawnbroker and pawnor<sup>9</sup>, or where the debtor is in a fiduciary position to the creditor<sup>10</sup>. Interest is also allowed on pecuniary legacies not paid within a certain time<sup>11</sup>, on the dissolution of a partnership<sup>12</sup>, on the arrears of an annuity where there has been misconduct or improper delay in payment<sup>13</sup>, or in the case of money obtained or retained by fraud<sup>14</sup>. It may also be allowed where the defendant ought to have done something which would have entitled the claimant to interest at common law<sup>15</sup>, or has wrongfully prevented the claimant from doing something which would have so entitled him<sup>16</sup>.

5 The general rule (which extends to land and other property) is that a vendor is entitled to interest from the time the purchaser takes possession until payment of the purchase price (International Rly Co v Niagara Parks Commission [1941] AC 328 at 344-348, [1941] 2 All ER 456 at 463-465, PC; Birch v Joy (1852) 3 HL Cas 565); and where the purchaser is entitled to rescind the contract and recover his deposit, he is entitled to interest on the deposit (Day v Singleton [1899] 2 Ch 320 at 327, CA). MONEY/(1) MONEY AND INTEREST ON MONEY/(ii) Interest on Money/A. THE RIGHT TO INTEREST/1307. Interest under statute.

1307. Interest under statute.

A right to interest is conferred by statute in many cases, as, for example upon the late payment of some commercial debts<sup>1</sup>, in the administration of bankrupt estates<sup>2</sup> and in the liquidation of companies<sup>3</sup>; and, by statute, the court has a general discretion to award interest in claims for debt or damages<sup>4</sup>.

Subject to the rules of court, in proceedings (whenever instituted) before the High Court for the recovery of a debt or damages<sup>5</sup> simple interest<sup>6</sup> may be included in any sum for which judgment is given, at such rate as the court thinks fit or as rules of court may provide, on all or any part of the debt or damages in respect of which judgment is given, or where payment is made before judgment, for all or any part of the period between the date when the cause of action arose and: (1) in the case of any sum paid before judgment, the date of the payment; and (2) in the case of the sum for which judgment is given, the date of judgment<sup>7</sup>. Similarly, in any proceedings tried<sup>8</sup> in any court of record<sup>9</sup> for the recovery of any debt or damages the court may, if it thinks fit<sup>10</sup>, order that there is to be included in the sum for which judgment is given interest at such rate as it thinks fit<sup>11</sup> on the whole or any part of the debt or damages for the whole or any part of the period between the date when the cause of action arose and the date of the judgment<sup>12</sup>. This power of the court is exercisable only if a claim for interest is specifically pleaded<sup>13</sup>.

An arbitration tribunal may<sup>14</sup> award simple or compound interest from such dates, at such rates and with such rests as it considers meets the justice of the case<sup>15</sup>.

Every judgment debt<sup>16</sup> carries interest at eight per cent per annum from such time as prescribed by rules of court until it is satisfied<sup>17</sup>. The rules of court state that where interest is so payable<sup>18</sup> the interest begins to run from the date that judgment is given unless another rule or a practice direction makes different provision, or unless the court orders otherwise<sup>19</sup>. The court may order that interest is to begin to run from a date before the date that judgment is given<sup>20</sup>.

A contract to pay a debt with interest at a certain rate does not entitle a claimant to levy under his execution more than the statutory rate; the contract must state specifically that any judgment obtained for the recovery of the debt carries interest at a higher rate and that higher rate should form part of the judgment<sup>21</sup>.

Certain tribunals have special statutory powers to direct the payment of interest on their awards<sup>22</sup>.

2 As to the administration of bankrupt estates see BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARA 390 et seq.

5 The words 'debt or damage' cover any sum recoverable by one party from another either at common law or in equity or under a statute such as the Law Reform (Frustrated Contracts) Act 1943: BP Exploration Co (Libya) Ltd v Hunt (No 2) [1983] 2 AC 352, [1982] 1 All ER 925, HL. A claim as a creditor, other than a judgment creditor, in a company's winding up is not a claim for the recovery of any debt or damage: Re Fine Industrial Commodities Ltd [1956] Ch 256, [1955] 3 All ER 707. A court ordering stamp duty to be repaid under the Stamp Act 1891 s 13(4) may order it to be repaid with such interest as it may determine (see the Finance Act 1965 s 91 (now repealed for some purposes); and STAMP DUTIES AND STAMP DUTY RESERVE TAX vol 44(1) (Reissue) PARA 1112) despite the fact that the repayment of duty is not a debt (Western United Investment Co Ltd v IRC [1958] Ch 392, [1958] 1 All ER 257). A fraudulent preference is a debt: Re FP & CH Matthews Ltd [1982] Ch 257, [1982] 1 All ER 338, CA.

6 For the principle that income tax is deductible on payment of interest awarded see INCOME TAXATION vol 23(1) (Reissue) PARA 464 et seq.

7 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 35A(1) (s 35A added by the Administration of Justice Act 1982 Sch 1 Pt I). Interest in respect of a debt may not be awarded for a period during which, for whatever reason, interest on the debt already runs: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 35A(4) (as so added). Interest may be calculated at different rates in respect of different periods: s 35A(6) (as so added). Nothing in s 35A affects the damages recoverable for the dishonour of a bill of exchange: s 35A(8) (as so added). As to damages for dishonour of a bill of exchange see PARA 1602. As from a day to be appointed, the Supreme Court Act 1981 is to be renamed as the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 Pt 1 para 1. 12 Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1934 s 3(1). This provision is repealed in its application to the High Court and the county courts by the Administration of Justice Act 1982 s 15(4), (5). It does not apply in relation to any debt upon which interest is payable as of right, whether by virtue of any agreement or otherwise; nor does it affect the damages recoverable for the dishonour of a bill of exchange, nor authorise the giving of interest upon interest: see the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1934 s 3(1) proviso. As a means of ensuring prompt payment it is not uncommon for loan agreements to provide for a specified default interest rate, that a higher rate of interest would apply in the event of default by the borrower<sup>1</sup>. There has been some consideration as to whether such a default rate of interest constitutes a penalty; and it seems that it does not, provided that the higher rate is a reasonable reflection of the increased credit risk which flows from the default<sup>2</sup>.

B. THE RATE AND RECOVERY OF INTEREST

1309. No limit to agreed rate.

Subject to the statutory power of the court to set aside or vary a transaction in the case of certain unfair credit agreements<sup>1</sup>, there is no restriction on the terms which may be agreed between a borrower and a lender for the payment of interest, and the ordinary principles of the law of contract govern any such agreement<sup>2</sup>. The same principles apply to interest upon other debts.

<sup>1</sup> See now the provisions on relationships that are unfair to the debtor in the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss 140A-140C (added by the Consumer Credit Act 2006 ss 19-21) (see CONSUMER CREDIT) replacing the former provisions on extortionate credit bargains (ie the Consumer Credit Act 1974 ss 137-140 (repealed)). See also Wilson v First County Trust Ltd (No 2) [2003] UKHL 40, [2004] 1 AC 816, sub nom Wilson v First County Trust Ltd [2003] 4 All ER 97 (extortionate credit bargain; compatibility of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 s 127(3) (now repealed) and human rights legislation).

<sup>2</sup> See generally CONTRACT. See also Provincial North West plc v Bennett (1999) Times, 11 February, CA, where reference in a facility letter from a bank to '3% above the bank's base rate' was to be taken to mean the bank's base rate for the time being and from time to time, there being no necessity to give notice to vary such base rate.

MONEY/(1) MONEY AND INTEREST ON MONEY/(ii) Interest on Money/B. THE RATE AND RECOVERY OF INTEREST/1310. Amount usually allowed by courts.

1310. Amount usually allowed by courts.

Where the rate of interest is not fixed by statute, agreement, or usage, there is no hard and fast rule as to the amount that will be allowed<sup>1</sup>; and the rate may vary according to the practice of the particular court, the value of money for the time being and the circumstances of the particular case<sup>2</sup>. In the past the usual practice, apart from special circumstances, was to allow five per cent in cases where the interest was partly in the nature of a penalty<sup>3</sup>, and in commercial and speculative transactions<sup>4</sup>, and three or four per cent in others<sup>5</sup>, but more realistic rates based on modern conditions are now awarded<sup>6</sup>.

Where there is a contract for the payment of money on a fixed day, with interest at a fixed rate down to that day, and default is made in payment of the principal, the rate of interest mentioned in the contract is the rate usually allowed from the time of default<sup>7</sup>, without there being a general rule of law to that effect<sup>8</sup>.

If the principal remains unpaid by reason of the creditor's delay<sup>6</sup>, or from any cause outside the debtor's control<sup>7</sup>, interest may not be claimed.

(2) LOANS OF MONEY

(i) In general

1313. Nature of loans and contracts for loans.

A loan of money generally creates a debt<sup>1</sup> and not an obligation to return the specific coins lent<sup>2</sup>. At common law money constituting a debt is not regarded as identifiable, but in equity sums representing an original fund may in certain circumstances be traced into other property and other hands<sup>3</sup>. Where a loan is made by two or more persons jointly, whether or not they advance equal amounts, they are treated as tenants in common in equity with respect to their rights<sup>4</sup>.

A contract to lend money is, subject to certain provisions<sup>5</sup> and possibly to special rules as to the measure of damages for its breach<sup>6</sup>, governed by the ordinary law relating to contracts<sup>7</sup>.

The mere payment of a sum of money or a cheque is not evidence of the creation of a loan<sup>8</sup>; nevertheless there is a prima facie obligation to repay<sup>9</sup> in the absence of circumstances giving rise to a presumption of advancement. Payment of sums equal to interest is evidence of a loan<sup>10</sup> and an 'IOU' is sufficient prima facie evidence although not addressed to anyone<sup>11</sup>.

1 Eg a deposit in a bank account renders the banker his customer's debtor: see PARA 839. As to satisfaction of a debt see Pinnel's Case (1602) 5 Co Rep 117a; Foakes v Beer (1884) 9 App Cas 605, HL (as a general rule, a debt can only be discharged by payment of the sum owed). There may be a loan even though the person providing the money advanced could in law sue for its recovery as money lent: De Vigier v IRC [1964] 2 All ER 907, [1964] 1 WLR 1073, HL. To lend money is not the same thing as to carry on the business of moneylending: Chow Yoong Hong v Choong Fah Rubber Manufactory [1962] AC 209 at 218, [1961] 3 All ER 1163 at 1168, PC. Note that the Moneylenders Acts 1900 to 1927 are now wholly repealed.

1314. Security for loans.

The repayment of a loan may be secured by the giving of security in various forms, for example: (1) by the giving of a bill of sale over goods intended to remain in the borrower's possession<sup>1</sup>; (2) by the mortgage of land or property other than personal chattels<sup>2</sup>; (3) by the pawn or pledge of goods<sup>3</sup>; (4) by the giving of a bottomry bond on a ship and cargo or a respondentia bond on the cargo alone<sup>4</sup>; (5) by the issue of debentures or debenture stock<sup>5</sup> or of a certificate of deposit<sup>6</sup>; (6) by the deposit of bills of exchange, stocks and shares, life assurance policies or documents of title to goods<sup>7</sup>. A bill of exchange or promissory note may itself be prima facie evidence of a loan having been made by the payee, if payment is not contingent on some event inconsistent with such a presumption<sup>8</sup>.

Where a person has a claim against another, there may be circumstances under which a third person may have the benefit of enforcing the claim under the doctrine of subrogation<sup>9</sup>.

1 See PARA 1674 et seq. A bill of sale given by way of security for the payment of money is void if it is not in accordance with the statutory form and is not registered: see PARA 1711 et seq.

1315. Irrecoverable loans.

A loan made for an illegal purpose cannot be recovered after the purpose has been wholly or partly carried out<sup>1</sup>.

Loans made knowingly for the purpose of unlawful gaming were previously irrecoverable<sup>2</sup>; and other loans made for betting or for paying betting debts are in general recoverable so long as the borrower is not actually bound by the terms of the loan to apply the money to these purposes<sup>3</sup>, and securities for betting loans are not invalidated<sup>4</sup>.

Loans made to minors are voidable<sup>5</sup>.

A loan made to another for the purpose of discharging an obligation which had arisen under a transaction which, to the knowledge of the person making the loan, was illegal, taints the loan itself with illegality and renders it unenforceable<sup>6</sup>.

1 As to the effect of illegality and unenforceability on securities for the repayment of a loan see CONTRACT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARAS 839, 880 et seq. As to contracts governed by foreign law see CONFLICT OF LAWS vol 8(3) (Reissue) PARA 359 et seq.

1316. Relief of borrowers.

A borrower of money may obtain relief on the ground that the contract is void or illegal<sup>1</sup>, or has been procured by misrepresentation or is affected with fraud<sup>2</sup> or is otherwise unconscionable<sup>3</sup>. Where relief is sought under the equitable jurisdiction of the court, relief will not normally be granted except upon the terms that the applicant for relief should himself do that which the court considers fair and equitable in the matter<sup>4</sup>. Relief is also available to debtors and sureties in appropriate cases where the court regards a credit agreement as unfair to the debtor<sup>5</sup>.

1317. Borrowing by the government, local authorities etc.

<sup>3</sup> The borrowing powers of particular bodies, industries and undertakings are covered in the title relevant to the body, industry or undertaking in question.

MONEY/(2) LOANS OF MONEY/(ii) Loans to and by Particular Persons/1318. Borrowing by companies, partners and other associations.

1318. Borrowing by companies, partners and other associations.

The borrowing powers of a company regulated by the Companies Act 1985 are determined by that Act and by the constitution of the company<sup>1</sup>. Certain charges given by such a company to secure borrowings are void if not registered; but the contract to repay the money borrowed is not affected by non-registration of the charge, and the loan becomes repayable as soon as the charge is avoided<sup>2</sup>. Other commercial or trading corporations have implied power to borrow<sup>3</sup>. Where a loan is made to a company which the company has not power to borrow, and is properly spent by the company in paying its creditors, the lender may be subrogated to the rights of the creditors<sup>4</sup>.

In the case of a trading partnership or any other partnership carrying on a business which requires the borrowing of money, a partner has implied power to borrow on behalf of the partnership for the purposes of the business<sup>5</sup>, but if a partner borrows money in his own name on his own security the fact that it is used for partnership purposes with the knowledge of the other partners will not make them liable to the lender<sup>6</sup>.

The borrowing powers of friendly societies<sup>7</sup>, industrial and provident societies<sup>8</sup> and building societies<sup>9</sup> are dealt with elsewhere in this title.

MONEY/(2) LOANS OF MONEY/(ii) Loans to and by Particular Persons/1319. Loans to or by married women.

1319. Loans to or by married women.

There is no presumption that a married woman living with her husband has his authority to borrow in his name; and a husband is not liable to repay loans borrowed by his wife in his name without authority, even where she has been deserted or turned out by him, and has borrowed the money for, and spent it on, necessities<sup>1</sup>.

1320. Minors.

The Infants Relief Act 1874 provided that all contracts entered into by minors for the repayment of money lent or for goods supplied or to be supplied (other than contracts for necessities<sup>1</sup>), and all accounts stated with minors were absolutely void, with the exception of contracts which might be entered into by minors under another rule of law<sup>2</sup>. However, that Act<sup>3</sup> does not apply to any contract made by a minor after 9 June 1987<sup>4</sup>. As a result of the disapplication of the Infants Relief Act 1874 the contracts in question are subject to the rules of common law, which provide that, subject to certain exceptions, a child's contract is generally voidable at the instance of the child, although it is binding upon the other party<sup>5</sup>.

1321. Loans by particular persons and bodies.

The Consumer Credit Act 1974 regulates certain credit agreements, and for the purposes of that Act, 'credit' includes a cash loan and any other form of financial accommodation<sup>1</sup>. The Act also provides a new code for pawnbroking<sup>2</sup>. Loans by building societies<sup>3</sup> and friendly societies<sup>4</sup> are subject to special statutory provisions.

There are a number of public bodies concerned with the lending of money for particular purposes, for example the Public Works Loan Commissioners, who lend to local authorities<sup>5</sup>, and the Agricultural Mortgage Corporation Limited, which lends to farmers<sup>6</sup>.

1322. Offences in connection with loans.

It is an offence for any person to make a gain for himself or any other person by dishonestly making a false representation<sup>1</sup>. In addition to this general offence, there are various offences specifically associated with loans<sup>2</sup>; for example, a bankrupt is guilty of an offence if he obtains credit to the extent of the prescribed amount or more without giving the person from whom he obtains it the relevant information about his status<sup>3</sup>.

1323. Unlawful harassment of debtors.

A person commits an offence<sup>1</sup> if, with the object of coercing another person to pay money claimed from the other as a debt due under a contract, he: (1) harasses the other with demands for payment which are calculated to subject him or members of his family or household to alarm, distress or humiliation; (2) falsely represents that criminal proceedings lie for failure to pay money claimed; (3) falsely represents himself to be authorised to claim or enforce payment; or (4) utters a document falsely represented by him to have some official character which he knows it has not<sup>2</sup>.

1 See under the Administration of Justice Act 1970 s 40(1): see CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE vol 11(2) (2006 Reissue) PARA 828. A person guilty of an offence under s 40 is liable on summary conviction to a fine of not more than level 5 on the standard scale: s 40(4) (amended by virtue of the Criminal Justice Act 1982 ss 35, 38, 46). It is an offence for any person with a view to financial gain to send to a minor any document inviting him: (1) to borrow money; (2) to obtain goods on credit or hire; (3) to obtain services on credit; or (4) to apply for information or advice on borrowing money or otherwise obtaining credit or hiring goods<sup>1</sup>.

(3) THE NATIONAL DEBT

(i) Constitution of the National Debt

1325. Origin and subdivision of the National Debt.

The National Debt of the United Kingdom in its present form had its origin in a loan of £1,200,000 at eight per cent made to the Crown in 1694 on the security of the public funds, the subscribers being incorporated as the Bank of England<sup>1</sup>. Now the National Loans Fund, for which the Treasury is responsible, is held as an account at the Bank of England<sup>2</sup>. Money paid into this account forms one general fund to meet all outgoings from the fund<sup>3</sup>. Excess of payments out of the National Loans Fund over receipts into it are provided for by money being raised in such manner and on such terms and conditions as the Treasury thinks fit<sup>4</sup>.

The National Debt of the United Kingdom is divided into the External Debt, consisting of money borrowed from the governments of Canada, the United States of America and other overseas countries<sup>5</sup>, and the Internal Debt, consisting of the Funded Debt<sup>6</sup> and the Unfunded Debt<sup>7</sup>.

1 See the Bank of England Act 1694 s 19; and PARA 793. The capital of the bank and the amounts advanced by it to the government were increased under subsequent enactments (now repealed). As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 2 note 3. As to the Bank of England PARA 793 et seq.

2 As to the National Loans Fund see PARA 1334; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 727 et seq. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

4 See the National Loans Act 1968 s 12(1); and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 728.

5 Debt payable in sterling to overseas governments and international institutions is sometimes treated as part of the Unfunded Debt, eg loans from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and from the International Monetary Fund: see PARA 1391.

MONEY/(3) THE NATIONAL DEBT/(i) Constitution of the National Debt/1326. The Internal Debt: Funded Debt.

1326. The Internal Debt: Funded Debt.

The Funded Debt is debt the principal of which the government need not repay until it wishes. It consists of the debts to the Banks of England<sup>1</sup> and Ireland<sup>2</sup> and, for the greater part, of undated government securities, that is to say securities not redeemable at any fixed date, for example, 2½ per cent Consolidated Stock ('Consols')<sup>3</sup>, 2¾ and 2½ per cent Perpetual Annuities<sup>4</sup>, and 3½ per cent War Loan<sup>5</sup> and 3 per cent Treasury Stock issued in exchange for Bank of England stock<sup>6</sup>. The process of reborrowing for a longer period, thus moving towards having no fixed date of redemption, is usually described as funding.

1 See PARA 1325.

2 See 21 & 22 Geo 3 c 16 (1782), 37 Geo 3 c 50 (1797), the Bank of Ireland Act 1808, and the Bank of Ireland Act 1821.

3 See the National Debt (Conversion) Act 1888 s 2(1) (amended by the Statute Law Revision Act 1908; and the Decimal Currency Act 1969 s 10(1)); and the National Debt (Conversion) Act 1888 s 2(2) (amended by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1986). The stock is to form part of the National Debt and annuities are payable by equal quarterly dividends on 5 January, 5 April, 5 July and 5 October in every year: National Debt (Conversion) Act 1888 s 2(3) (amended by the Statute Law Revision Act 1908). The 2½% consolidated stock is redeemable by Parliament on such notice, at such times and in such manner as Parliament may direct: see the National Debt (Conversion) Act 1888 s 2(2) (amended by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1986). The dividends on the stock are charged on the National Loans Fund with recourse to the Consolidated Fund: see the National Debt (Conversion) Act 1888 s 2(5) (amended by the Statute Law Revision Act 1959; the National Loans Act 1968 Sch 5; and the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1986). As to the National Loans Fund see PARA 1334; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 727 et seq. As to the Consolidated Fund see PARA 1334; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 711 et seq; PARLIAMENT vol 78 (2010) PARA 1028 et seq.

4 The 2½% annuities were issued under 16 & 17 Vict c 23 (National Debt) (1853) (repealed), and the 2¾% annuities were issued under the National Debt (Conversion of Stock) Act 1884 s 1(1) (repealed). Both form part of the National Debt and are charged on the National Loans Fund with recourse to the Consolidated Fund: see the National Debt Act 1870 s 5 (amended by the Statute Law Revision Act 1950); the National Debt Act 1870 s 6 (amended by the National Loans Act 1968 s 13(6), Sch 5); and the National Debt (Conversion of Stock) Act 1884 s 1(4), (5) (amended by the National Loans Act 1968 Sch 5, Sch 6 Pt I; and the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1986). As to their redemption see the National Debt (Conversion of Stock) Act 1884 s 1(2), (3) (s 1(2) amended by the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1986).

5 This loan was raised under the War Loan Act 1916 s 1 (repealed). The principal of and interest on this 3½% War Loan Stock, together with the expenses incurred in connection with its redemption, are charged on the National Loans Fund with recourse to the Consolidated Fund: National Debt Act 1972 s 13.

6 Bank of England Act 1946 s 1(1)(b). The principal of and interest on the stock, and issue and redemption expenses, are charged on the National Loans Fund with recourse to the Consolidated Fund: s 1(5), Sch 1 para 1 (amended by the Statute Law Revision Act 1963; and the National Loans Act 1968 Sch 5).

MONEY/(3) THE NATIONAL DEBT/(i) Constitution of the National Debt/1327. The Internal Debt: Unfunded Debt.

1327. The Internal Debt: Unfunded Debt.

1 As to the Funded Debt see PARA 1326.

2 These were issued under the National Loans Act 1939 ss 1, 2 (repealed). The principal of and interest on them are charged on the National Loans Fund with recourse to the Consolidated Fund: s 3(3) (amended by the National Loans Act 1968 Sch 5). As to the National Loans Fund see PARA 1334; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 727 et seq. As to the Consolidated Fund see PARA 1334; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 711 et seq; PARLIAMENT vol 78 (2010) PARA 1028 et seq.

3 Eg 3½% Funding Stock 1999-2004 and 5½% Funding Stock 1982-1984 were issued under the National Loans Act 1939 s 1 (repealed), the principal, interest and management expenses being charged on the National Loans Fund with recourse to the Consolidated Fund: see s 3(3) (as amended: see note 2).

4 Premium savings bonds are issued under the Treasury's general powers to borrow pursuant to the National Loans Act 1968 s 12: see s 12(6)(a); the Premium Savings Bonds Regulations 1972, SI 1972/765; and PARA 1362 et seq. As to the Treasury see PARA 3; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 512 et seq.

5 As to savings certificates see PARA 1352 et seq.

6 These are issued under the Treasury's general powers to borrow pursuant to the National Loans Act 1968 s 12, and replace the former tax reserve certificates: see INCOME TAXATION vol 23(2) (Reissue) PARA 1798.
